INTRODUCTION

Sitting in my desk chair, sipping a cup of coffee while my fingers move to the rhythm of my thoughts, but for a moment I stop and among the many things that go through my head I now catch one: what am I doing? What am I?

I realize I can answer those two, they don't seem so difficult at first: I'm writing a book on a document that is starting to become less and less white, sitting in my desk chair, looking at a computer and seeing the letters suddenly appear; yes, I am. and who am I? I'm a 21 year old guy, black hair, average height, as well as weight, entrepreneur, and well, I could go on.

They were not so difficult to answer in the end.

Or is it that these answers are not right?

How do I really know what I'm doing? I mean, what I told you before is fine, but it is very mundane. On a personal and material level I may just be doing that, but if we are made up of millions of atoms and molecules, with a life of their own as well and they are part of me, should I include them in what I am doing? Should I also include them when I am asked who I am?

I don't want to beat around the bush, although in this book the least you will achieve is to stay in the same place.

I want to give you answers, extracted from my own research, as well as from great researchers and referents, but you will not see the absolute truth at all. It is not a book where you will come out with things clear, but it will be a book that you will finish and you will not have understood anything at all, but at the same time you will know that you have information that no one else has, that you know things that not everyone knows.

I do not expect the reader to understand, the least he should do is to try to understand. I want the reader to enjoy asking, questioning and through the play of words, beliefs, questioning, research, images and phrases, to discover what lies beyond everything around us; or to realize what is the only thing there is.

NOITSEUQ 1

What are we doing here?
What is the purpose of being alive?

I decided to place these two questions "together" because I consider that they basically deal with the same subject: why did we come to this world and what is the reason for being alive.

I think that asking yourself what you are doing in the world, and while you are here, what is the purpose of your being here, are some of the most powerful questions you can ask yourself. If you really ask yourself deeply what your purpose is, there is no way you will not feel your body vibrating.

Since I feel that the question of what we are doing here can be answered more quickly in this chapter (since as you get deeper into the questions you will realize that you will be able to give your own answer) I will start with it.

We will divide it into three parts:

First, let's consider that we are here for a reason (at the level of humanity). Second, we will address this question at the individual level, i.e., what is each person doing here. Third, we are going to pose that there is no reason to be here and we will give an answer to it as well (in terms of the collective and individuality).

It is important to note that when I use the word "here" I am not referring to any place, only that this is the way we can shape the words so that they can be understood later in the following paragraphs.

1) We are here for a reason (humanity level)

Have you ever thought about what role we all play globally in the universe? Or, well, what are we doing here on Earth?

What are billions of atoms doing here? Buying things? Producing? Eating? What are they doing?

Before I answer all this and you continue with the book, I want to make it clear that we are not going to answer anything from an earthly character, that is even boring. It's just that, think about it, if we wanted to, we could answer those questions with a yes, since that's what we do (we buy things, we reproduce, we eat, etc.) but we well know that there is something beyond all that, or at least that's what we want to believe.

A part of us (our ego) wants to believe that this is so, we want to have a reason to be, to exist, we want to be here for something (and if it is heroic, all the better). We would not like at all to know that we are nothing in this vast universe, that we do not fulfill any role in "our Earth". We are THE HUMAN RACE, how can we not be important? Besides, we have a planet (which by the way we love, take care of and defend).

If we all do things together we can do GREAT THINGS. I agree on that, but has humanity ever really worked together to accomplish anything?

I believe that, if we have a reason to be here at the community level, it would be that we achieve the same level of consciousness. It's not about thinking alike or being alike; it's about having the same level of consciousness.

By consciousness I refer to the capacity that each one of us can achieve to be at peace, to be present, to have a level of "intelligence" that allows us to realize that there are no borders, no languages, no religions, no political doctrines that can separate us.

If there is a reason to be here, it is to achieve a new level of togetherness.

What would that be good for?

Let me answer you with these questions: Why are there wars? Why is there no global acceptance of the other?

2) We are here for a reason (individual level)

As in the first case, our ego is in charge of giving a reason for this. Are we here to help thousands and thousands of people? To change the world? He will answer yes, it's just that if I don't do something this big, who am I going to be?

Our ego does not want to be forgotten, it wants quite the opposite: to be remembered for what it did and said, for the legacy it was able to leave behind.

Is this wrong?

To what my belief supports, right or wrong must be questioned by the judgment of each individual.

So, on an individual level, everyone can have a reason for being, a reason that makes them get up every morning to achieve their dreams, goals and objectives in the world.

3) There is no reason to be here

For some I think it would be a disappointment, i.e. helping so many people for nothing, changing the world for what then?

If there is no reason for each and every one of us to be on planet Earth, what would be wrong with it?

If there is one thing we all know how to do (although not very well) it is to live (sleep, eat, reproduce), we have the basics.

Everything outside of that, is it necessary?

If we focus on basic needs, one would not need more than what I have mentioned.

Therefore, there may be no reason for us to be on the planet, nor for us to be part of the cosmos. In the end, what can millions of atoms in human form do in a universe that apparently has infinite dimensions?

Whatever you believe, here is a great invitation: to find your own way. Life, after all, is simply meaning, which means that we have the capacity to give it the meaning we want. From that point is that you can take responsibility for your life and build what you want.

Whatever the "reason" for all of that to exist, I really don't think it's to live a life of sorrow and suffering. Truth be told, I think it's all about recognizing our inner abundance so that we stop looking for validation out there. And that we can forgive so that we can live in peace. That's what I think we deserve.

NOITSEUQ 2

Why are we "The Human Race"?

Nowadays our species is called Homo Sapiens, which we all know means "wise men". A term which in itself is meaningless and abounds with machismo for the simple reason that not all the inhabitants of the Earth are men, but that would be another subject.

In biology, "race" is used to define groups with common genetic characteristics, so on the biological side the term is well stated, although some anthropologists argue that the human species is only composed of a single race, which is divided into several ethnicities (people who have similar cultural practices and social behaviors) and these in turn are divided into peoples.

As far as I see it, it's all just words for us to "communicate better".

But if we want to answer the question of why we are The Human Race, we will have to go beyond simple words and definitions, however much they may guide us to a result.

Why do we have to call ourselves that way? Who or what do we have to differentiate ourselves from?

At the Earthly level, we want to use the term ethnicity and not race to divide humans with different characteristics (whether cultural or biological) to eradicate racism, but at the universal level, from whom do we have to differentiate ourselves?

This is what I mean when I say that they are just words to "communicate better". They are terms created by humans, people with the capacity to reason, just like you and I. Why should we believe it?

If we need to call ourselves "the human race of wise men", is it because there are other types of intelligent beings in the universe?

As the matter is posed, with this simple question we would have no choice but to answer yes, and by answering yes only by deriving from a term created by "humans" we would affirm the existence of different types of extraterrestrial races, since otherwise we would not need to use the term "human race".

So why are we the human race?

From my point of view, and leaving the reader to form his own judgment, we are the human race because it was necessary (who knows why) to give us a name at a global level. They chose race, and since no one ever questioned it (why would anyone?) that term is the one used today.

As we have already commented, on the Earthly level there are different types of races or ethnicities (the word changes and the definition changes, but each one of us knows that no person is the same as another, even if it is of the "race" or "ethnicity" that he or she is).

What I want to make clear with this chapter before continuing, is that to understand something you have to question everything, you have to see what is there from as many points of view as possible, questioning even the most obvious and what is not so obvious. Each one of us has that possibility.

In one instance, you see whether you use that to separate yourself from others or as an impetus to join them. We are all on this physical planet with no knowledge other than what we have been told. Knowledge that when you question it seems to have many more flaws than hits. But whatever. The real question may be, how will I live with it?

Is the sun just a star?

I never imagined that I would be asked this question, it is that until a while ago I affirmed with complete certainty that the sun is simply a star, that there is nothing strange there. NASA has always shown us what we want to see, and the sun can be no exception.

Is the sun just that giant ball of fire that shines every day and is indispensable for us to be alive?

At this time, the best thing to do is not to say yes.

Thanks to the website www.helioviewer.org we can observe the sun, in the present and in the past.

This web site (which I invite you to check out) is an online tool for observing the Sun based on the Solar Dynamics Observatory's image record.

It allows us to monitor the sun even by the minute.

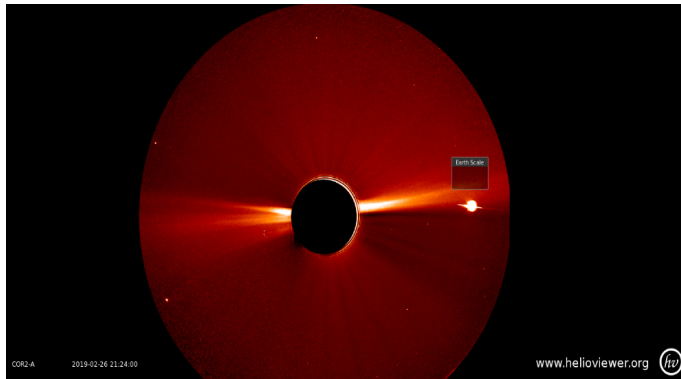

This image you see now, is an object found in that tool by Nacho Rojo of the YouTube Channel Hidden Truth, on June 23, 2019, at the hour 10:10, where in the video titled "Huge anomaly in our solar system" he teaches us and explains in depth what is this strange object seen on the sun.

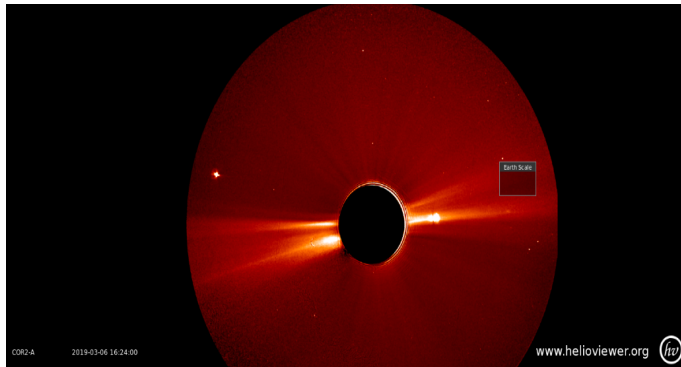

The object was there for approximately 8 minutes and then disappeared.

Pay attention to the picture next to the object, it is the scale of the Earth....

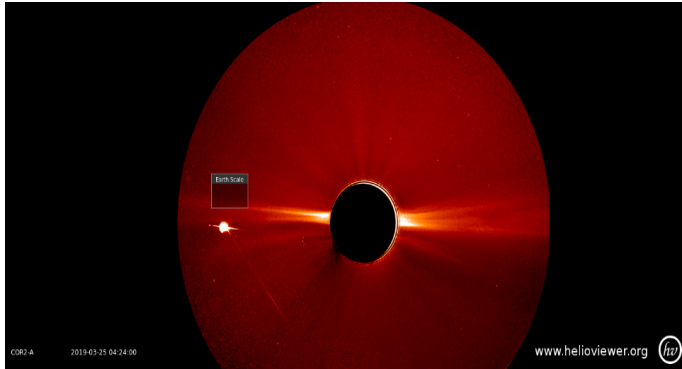

Like this case, there are more:

Giant UFO (check the scale of the Earth) appears on the right side.

We see how the object on the right is penetrating the sun and we also observe how another object appears on the left.

In this photograph we see how days later the object we saw in the first of these three images crossed the sun.

To check this out I recommend visiting the website and downloading the March 2019 movie to watch this course.

The funny thing about all this is that these anomalies are there, available for any of us to see with just a couple of clicks.

This can lead us to many questions: What are these objects? Are they objects? What are they doing there? Are they manned spacecraft? Why are they close to the sun? And I think the most powerful question that encompasses all of these is the one I pose as the title of this chapter.

This is not about denying anything, much less affirming anything, it is about each and every one of us seeing what is there.

In particular, the object in image 1 has a shape very similar to a flying saucer from the 80's. Isn't this very curious?

We can highlight its size, which as you may also have noticed with the scale of the planet Earth next to it, is much larger.

What if that object is itself a GIANT ship manned by millions of intergalactic beings whose intelligence is capable of creating walking planets that are nourished by the energy of giant stars like our sun?

Fact or science fiction?

Science fiction movies are becoming more and more real, even as the phrase goes, "reality surpasses fiction."

So the best thing to do today is to refrain from asserting anything, and rather enjoy the new discoveries. The only people who will suffer are those who were asleep, those who decided to close their eyes to what they were seeing because they were closed in their beliefs.

Closest to the answer

Bob Lazar (a person who claims to have worked from 1988 to 1989 as a physicist in a military zone called S-4 (Sector Four), located near Groom Lake in Nevada) tells us about his work with extraterrestrial spacecraft and particularly with element 115.

Bob says that the ships had a gravitational wave generator in the center, which powered a series of reactors that went in one direction or another and emitted gravity waves with enormous power that made it possible to move the apparatus at enormous speed.

The interesting thing about this is that element 115 (Ununpentium as Bob calls it) was discovered in 2004, calling it Moscovian, but this element today is considered unstable.

According to Bob Lazar, the extraterrestrials said that this element was extracted directly from the heart of the stars, which was the only way to find it in a stable way.

So, could it be that what we see in the images are indeed extraterrestrial spacecraft (manned or unmanned) but created by intelligent beings from some remote part of the universe? And that these spacecraft are powered by the energy of the Sun?

The images are there, a witness who has worked in area 51 is also there, proof that element 115 EXISTS is also there....

So... the sun is not just a star. Perhaps it would be more accurate to say that it is "a giant source of energy".

This is where the following theory comes into play: Dyson's star.

The "Dyson Sphere" is a hypothetical megastructure proposed by British physicist and mathematician Freeman Dyson in 1960. The fundamental idea behind this proposal is to maximize the energy of a star by building an artificial structure that completely surrounds it.

The Dyson sphere would be a megastructure of enormous dimensions, designed to capture and harness all the energy emitted by a star. This would be achieved by constructing a sphere or series of concentric rings around the star, which would capture all of its radiation and convert it into useful forms of energy for an advanced civilization.

The implications of building a Dyson sphere would be enormous. First, it provides a virtually unlimited source of energy for a civilization that would build one, since a typical star emits an enormous amount of energy over its lifetime. This could solve problems of energy shortages and could enable civilization development on previously unimaginable scales.

One of the stars that has been suggested as a possible candidate to look for evidence of the existence of a Dyson sphere is Tabby's Star, also known as KIC 8462852. This star, located in the constellation Cygnus, attracted the attention of the scientific community in 2015 due to its strange observational behavior.

Data collected by the Kepler space telescope showed that Tabby's Star experienced unexplained and extremely irregular brightness fluctuations. These fluctuations were much more pronounced than those observed in other stars and could not be easily explained by known stellar phenomena, such as the presence of orbiting planets.

One of the hypotheses proposed to explain this unusual behavior was the possibility that Tabby's Star was surrounded by a Dyson-type megastructure, such as a partially constructed or in-progress Dyson sphere.

Having said all this, in general, I do not believe that stars are only stars. We may not yet be able to bring out their true potential, but they have it, and other beings more technologically advanced than us know it. The evidence is more than clear.

NOITSEUQ 4

Is the moon a natural or artificial satellite?

Let us now turn to another of the stars that surrounds our Earth: the moon, is it real or fake?

Nafi Toksoz, a geophysicist at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, says: "It's much easier to explain why the moon shouldn't be there than to explain its existence" from the book "Early Earth"

As we have been told, the moon seems to have been formed in a completely natural way due to the collision of a planet the size of Mars and the Earth, but even this remains a theory that is not entirely certain.

Science is very much based on studies and observations, which seems to be the closest to the truth we have, but even so, many of these investigations end up being theories without a 100% concrete answer.

The truth is that the more we know about something, the less we know about that something.

The way I see it, the human has not even discovered 1% of all that is actually out there.

And you still want to believe something?

To believe in something today is to be willing to change that belief the next day, in a world where everything changes so fast, no one is safe in the truth of their beliefs, and less, if they are backed by science.

The only thing permanent is change, remember.

How old is the moon?

In reality, the exact age of the moon is not known, although it is estimated from rock samples to be 4.53 billion years old.

In Tibetan chronicles, as well as in Slavic legends, we read that in anti-diluvian times there was no moon in the sky.

In the Bible (Psalm 72): "You were feared from the time of the sun and before the time of the moon".

Is the moon hollow?

The great scientist Carl Sagan said that "a natural satellite cannot be a hollow object. So, what that means is, if it really is hollow, it is not a natural satellite... and therefore it is artificial."

The hollow moon theory results because of its density (3.3) compared to the density of the Earth (5.5) which would indicate that the inner regions of the Moon are less dense than the outer, giving rise to the inevitable speculation that it might be hollow.

In addition to this, the moon has hundreds of craters, but the curious thing is that they all have the same diameter depth and when the astronauts tried to drill inside these they were barely able to go deep into the surface.

The astronauts managed to bring back rocks containing bronze, mica, titanium, and the elements uranium 236 and neptunium 237, which are not elements of nature, i.e., they were created artificially.

At a scientific level, the question of whether it is a natural or artificial satellite is resolved, but let's go further.

Was the moon artificially placed in Earth's orbit?

It seems that neither its size nor its orbit match what it should be if it were really natural, therefore, at this point, the supposed collision of the Earth and another planet for the formation of the moon is more than in doubt.

The great fraud of 1969 or the perfect proof that there is INTELLIGENT extraterrestrial life on the moon?

Behind the missions that took place in those years, there are many conspiracy theories that test whether the moon landing actually occurred.

One of the biggest questions we ask ourselves is why haven't they been back to the moon in 50 years?

This seems easy for them to answer since they claim that it is because of money and socio-political issues, in short, there is no longer great interest in going to the moon.

After this, conspiracy theories do not seem to be more than that, since there were 9 missions that took place between 1968 and 1972, so, if someone wants to analyze and question something, he has a long job. If it was a fraud, it was the biggest fraud of all times, but we are far from affirming something like that.

The most obvious proof?

During the trip there were two minutes of video and radio silences when the cameras and recording equipment had a "simultaneous failure", but it happened to produce perfect picture and sound effects for the rest of the mission.

Years later close friends and relatives revealed what Armstrong said about what really happened in those minutes. Armstrong turned off the communication on his line and said, "there are other spacecraft here sir, lined up on the other side of the crater, those babies are huge, huge, they are watching us."

Many viewers wrote to the media explaining that they saw one of the astronauts pick up what appeared to be a glass bottle, but then the television screen went blank. Other viewers also observed that the astronauts had extreme difficulty drilling downward a few feet into the Moon, and that when the drill bit was removed, metal shavings appeared.

There is not a complete publication with this classified information, but there it is.

We can judge and doubt calmly because of the dubious things that happened in those missions and because of what did not happen afterwards.

But what is difficult to question is when human behavior is so obvious that the truth is leaking out of the pores. When the astronauts returned and were interviewed, their behavior was totally different than expected, as everyone thought they would see emotion in their eyes, but they expressed nothing but fear and doubt, as if they had seen something they had never imagined, and by the way, they could not tell anyone about it.

Why do we never see the dark side of the moon?

We have already commented that there is no logically scientific way to be sure that the moon is natural, and based on this, the questions increase.

The moon simultaneously performs a rotational movement on its own axis and a translational movement around the Earth, both movements are synchronous and with an approximate duration of 28 days, therefore, the moon always shows us the same face, but this phenomenon is totally unique in the known universe, strange isn't it?

Manipulation

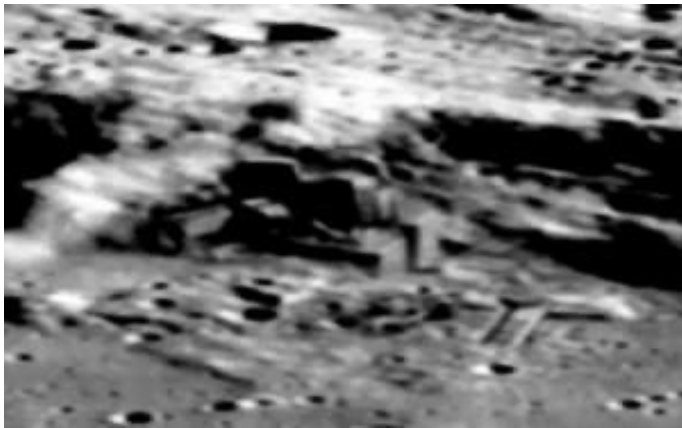

Dr. Donna Hare has been an eyewitness to how information is manipulated within NASA.

This woman worked for 15 years as a technical illustrator for the space agency.

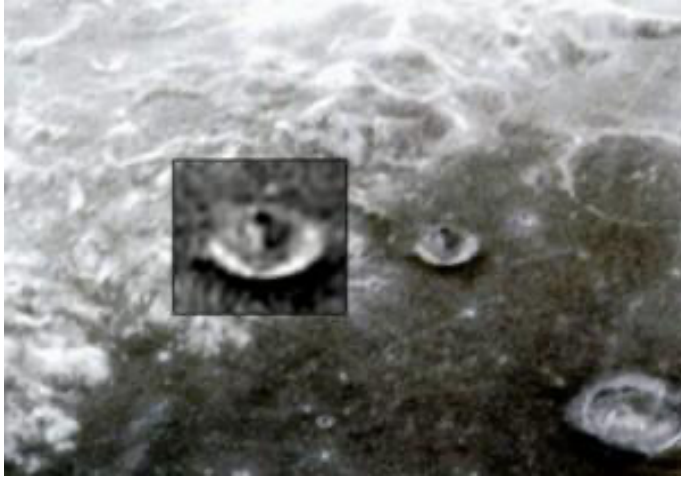

In an interview, he said when in contact with one of the Apollo astronauts, "the astronauts saw ships over the moon when they landed on the moon, and that he was also afraid to say that the astronauts were asked to be quiet."

In addition to Donna, another witness to photo manipulation is Sgt. Karl Wolfe, who claims to have seen photographs of bases on the dark side of the moon.

Bases on the dark side of the moon like the ones Karl Wolfe claims to have seen.

Construction on the dark side of the moon.

It is a fact that throughout history and the present, NASA shows us what it wants to show us, not what is really there.

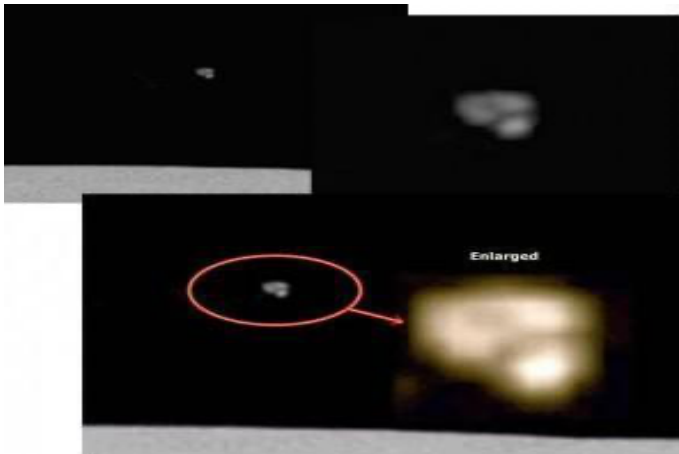

And this ended up being more than obvious when in a statement NASA said that public information of extraterrestrial life could cause the collapse of society, and therefore should remain clandestine.

From our side and with a highly critical opinion, it is more than obvious to us that doubting everything we have seen is the safest thing we have, and if we want to find the truth in anything it is through witnesses and inconsistencies caused by the excess of lies and the excess of hidden information.

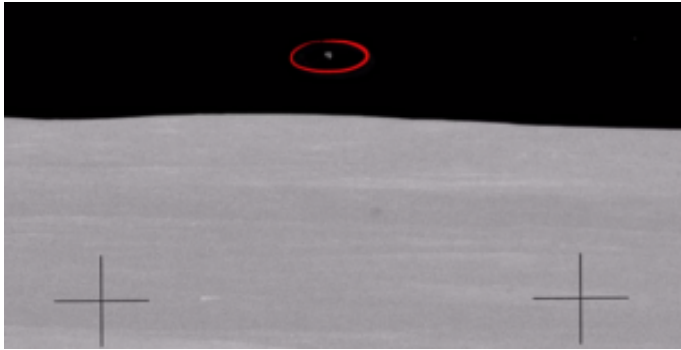

As I have said in previous chapters, as we decipher the other questions, you will realize that everything there points to pretty much the same thing.

UFO recorded by Apollo 12

Zoom UFO Apollo 15

Apollo 15 UFO

With all this captured, with all sides of the coin seen, it seems that the position we find ourselves in for the majority of the population is on the lower side, unable to know the absolute truth of what is going on out there.

In a very near future the human being will become intergalactic and many of these questions that today seem to flood us with doubts, will be the most real thing we have ever thought.

There are no two without one, just as NASA would have no need to hide and distort images if there was nothing behind them (which it has already confirmed).

To close this chapter, I would like to say that the moon was a great step for man, but a giant lie for mankind.

I don't know if they went or not, the only thing I have is the information that I present to you here. So, if they have not told the truth, then they are hiding something, and to do so, they are lying.

As you have already said, they have their positive intent behind it. Whether we agree with that or not, our job I don't think is to blame, but to take the reins and investigate and question everything.

NOITSEUQ 5

Is there life after death?

It would be crazy to think that there is, wouldn't it? From the moment we are born, it is clear to us that we are going to die, that life is simply a one-way road with an end?

But is that as clear as it seems?

Life after death is one of the most mysterious and often taboo questions we can encounter.

What do ancient cultures tell us?

The famous Bible tells us that after we die we have either heaven or hell.

Hinduism, that when we die we are reincarnated.

What does science tell us?

To study this phenomenon, scientists focus on studying NDEs (near-death experiences).

A very famous scientist in dealing with this subject, Dr. Raymond Moody, wrote a book entitled "Life after life", where he stated that all people, regardless of their culture and religious stance, after being clinically dead and coming back to life, had almost similar experiences.

The most described was a feeling of peace and seeing a luminous tunnel.

For many people this was strong evidence that there is life after death, but for others this could be due to lack of oxygen, which would cause these hallucinations.

In his book, Stephen Hawking responded to the question of whether there is life after death by saying, "Just as there is no God, there is no heaven or afterlife to live in after death. I believe that believing in life after death is an illusion".

What if death is just a creation of our consciousness?

This question is not as far-fetched as it sounds, as it even seems to be answered by quantum physics, and specifically in the new theory of biocentrism which assumes that death cannot be a terminal event, as we have always considered it. The concept of death is a mere product of our consciousness because we associate ourselves with our body and we know that physical bodies die (remember chapter one where I told you about the ego?).

If we introduce quantum physics into this question, it tells us that it is not that there is life after death, it is that death does not exist (quantum immortality).

Quantum physics is based on the theory of parallel universes, which suggests that any time a universe faces a choice of paths at a quantum level it actually follows all possibilities, splitting into multiple universes.

Meaning that there is no possibility of anything ending, further affirming the fact that death is the product of a long-established belief held by all of us.

What about death then?

We cannot refrain from believing one thing or the other,
not yet as there are still a couple of pieces of information
I want to show you, but we are getting closer and closer.

Reincarnation

As I mentioned at the beginning of this chapter, there are many cultures that believe in life after death, but others believe that, although if we die, what dies (ceases to function) is our physical body, so our subconscious mind or "soul" continues "alive".

The theory of reincarnation is not so far-fetched for the simple reason that it is very much supported by what the sciences have told us.

According to Lavoiser's famous law, energy is neither created nor destroyed, it is only transformed, and I want us to keep this in mind.

The human body is composed of millions of particles, all of which have energy.

Deducing: we are energy, and energy is only transformed, not destroyed, which would be the same as saying that... it does not die?

To this we must add the hundreds of cases of people with different ages who tell who they were in past lives.

Here is an example:

Patrick Christenson. She was born by cesarean section in Michigan in March 1991. His older brother, Kevin, had died of cancer twelve years earlier at the age of two. Early evidence of Kevin's cancer presented itself six months before his death when he began to walk and had a noticeable limp.

One day he fell and broke his leg. Tests were done, and after a biopsy on a small nodule on his scalp, just above his right ear, it was discovered that little Kevin had cancer with metastases. Soon tumors were found growing in other places in his body. One of these tumors developed into blindness in one eye.

Kevin was given chemotherapy, which caused scarring on the right side of his neck. He died three weeks after his second birthday. At birth, Patrick had a birthmark that looked like a small cut on the right side of his neck, exactly where Kevin's chemotherapy scar was. He also had a nodule on his scalp just above his right ear and a clouding of his left eye. When he started walking he was a little limp.

When he was almost four and a half years old he told his mother that he wanted to move back to his old orange and brown house. This was the color of the house in which the family had lived in 1979 when Kevin was alive. He then asked her if she remembered that he had undergone surgery. She replied that she couldn't because this had never happened to her. Patrick then pointed to a spot just above her right ear.*

He added that he did not remember the actual operation because he was asleep. The child's entire account was consistent with the details of Kevin's past life.

Hundreds more cases like this one can be found on the Internet, but if you would like to read some with research behind them, I recommend you to read the book: "Twenty cases that make you think about reincarnation" by Ian Stevenson.

Lavoiser's law will accompany us in other issues that we will address in the book, as well as it should be clear to you from this chapter that everyone and everything around us is composed of energy (particles at the microscopic level).

We will never be able to deduce something as 100% true, but what we can do is what you have seen in this chapter: gather all the information from all possible areas that deal with the same subject, whether they are contrary or not, to see which ones have more weight and once we have decided that, put them together to conclude something.

In this case, no one can prove life after death, but it is not necessary to prove that.

I was once told that in order to solve a problem or an issue you don't have to focus on the problem; the problem is the problem, period.

If we want to solve something we should focus on the solution and treat it on the outside, that is, look for a way to solve it without focusing on it, as we have done with this question.

I am not trying to answer you directly the question of whether there is life after death or not because I would give you my opinion, my beliefs, and sharing a belief is very easy.

What I want you to take away from this is that we have to understand all the information, and as I have also commented, you will increasingly realize that it all ties together and points to the same thing.

I remind myself of this phrase every day:

I am a spiritual being living a physical experience, not the other way around.

What happened in Ancient Egypt?

Many are the mysterious events that occurred in Egypt, but none compares to the great pyramids that we all know.

For many years they have been questioned and theories have been created around them.

Was it really the Egyptians who created the pyramids?

"The larger pyramids were built by our ability to utilize the forces of the One. The stones are alive. It is something that has not been so understood by the mind/body/spirit distortions of your culture."

-Excerpt from the book The Law of One.

That sentence reminds me of the ability of Edwad Leedskalnin, discussed in the book Know the Only Truth, who became an enigma of acoustic levitation as he built a rock gate park single-handedly using certain "powers". You have to read that story.

Behind how they were created there is a great debate to know how they managed to move the large rocks weighing more than 2 tons, and how they managed to do it with such perfection to create the incredible monuments that are today, which, by the way, currently no one can reproduce.

The rocks are made of the most resistant materials, such as granite, basalt, quartzite and diorite, which are difficult to carve even with the best tools.

The rocks were transported with ramps...

The most accepted explanation has been that the pyramids were built with the help of giant ramps, through which the slaves transported the stone blocks. But the great little detail of this is that, for this to work, the ramps should have been even bigger than the pyramids.

As a curiosity, the 3 pyramids are aligned with the Orion constellation, and although we will talk about this later, how is it possible that they have this perfection in architecture so many thousands of years ago?

Beyond all this, what was the purpose?

What historians and anthropologists have done over the years is to tell us the most logical thing that must have happened, even though many of these accounts are still open to doubt.

The only thing that is achieved by investigating the pyramids and the reason for the constructions is that they are of extraterrestrial origin.

The pyramids were created by intelligence that is not of this Earth, much less of the times in which they were created

I like to show you the part of all these questions from a side that is researched and has foundations first, for the simple reason that after each new discovery a new question arises, which brings us closer to the truth, to a truth that we would find it hard to believe and accept.

The book "The Law of One" has no scientific basis and is not supported, however, it tells us the same thing that many researchers have discovered.

The only way to deceive someone is to tell them something "logical" that leaves no room for questions, the issue is that when it is something logical without true evidence that what is said is what it is, it ends up being a deception.

The important thing is that you question yourself based on what I show you, no one else but yourself is capable of realizing your own truth.

Not to believe that the pyramids were created by extraterrestrial beings is to believe at the same time that the inhabitants of ancient Egypt were much more intelligent than today's population and that they had much more advanced materials and instruments. Which defies all history.

At the same time, we can also challenge history by believing that they were created by extraterrestrial beings, since no one has told us this, and we know that it does not appear in any history book.

They may not necessarily have been created by intelligent beings from somewhere else, but...

Could beings from other planets have visited the ancient Egyptian civilization and endowed them with new wisdom?

The inhabitants of ancient Egypt had many gods and many stories have been told over the years of how the pyramids were built, and not only those of Egypt, but of the whole world.

The most curious thing is that in every place where there are pyramids the inhabitants tell the same stories, whatever part of the world it is: beings from another planet came down and built the pyramids.

And the most beautiful thing about Egypt is that it is all captured either in the form of writings (hieroglyphs) or in the form of large buildings (the 3 pyramids of Giza, temples, giant tombs, sphinxes).

Just as it is more difficult to prove that the moon is a natural satellite than that it is not, it is more difficult to prove that the monuments of Ancient Egypt were created by humans of that time than by extraterrestrial civilizations that visited them.

The way things are.

Many pyramids around the world point to the constellation Orion. Why?

Throughout history there were many cultures that made great works of architecture in the form of pyramids.

The best known are those in Egypt, but there are also in Mexico, China, Indonesia, among others.

But why was Orion so important to ancient civilizations?

According to Egyptian mythology, the gods descended from there. They firmly believed that entities in the form of humans descended from Sirius and Orion, gods named Osiris and Isis, who were the ones who interacted with the human race and created the intelligent civilization in Egypt, and also associated this event with the creation of the entire human race.

This brings us to what we saw in the previous chapter about how these pyramids had been created (the balance turned to the extraterrestrial side).

Why did the ancient inhabitants of Earth make these pyramids?

It is said that the pyramids were built as temples where sacrifices were made in the name of the gods or many others were tombs.

One thing must be clear and that is that the inhabitants of America had no contact with the people who lived in Indonesia, for example, so there is no chance that they agreed to make the same sculptures. There must have been a purpose beyond the earthly and the logically deducible.

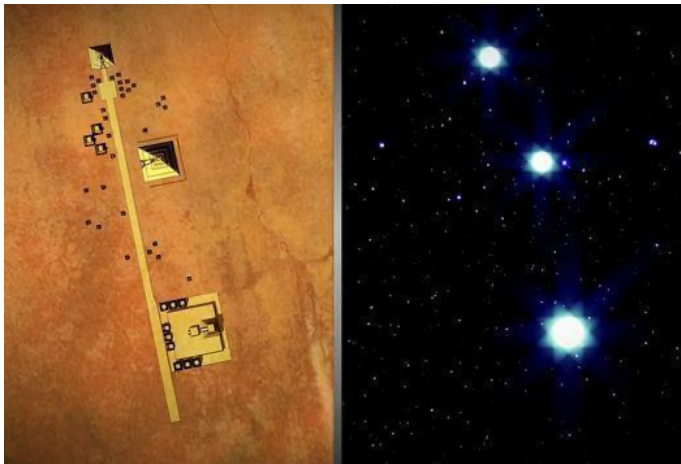

There are going to be many things that escape our understanding, so at times we have to put aside the use of reason and really immerse ourselves in what we are not told and what did happen.

The reader has to understand that there are many historical data that are not presented for the simple reason that they are not considered relevant to address the question. What is sought is to achieve critical thinking as stated at the beginning, because if one wanted to write about the pyramids and Egypt should write specifically about it, as it would give for a whole book.

It is best to avoid too much information and to know what is in each place. To have a panoramic view of what happened and with that to join all the sufficient points so that the question can be answered based on fundamentals and accurate information.

The reader can read more in depth about each of the topics presented here if he or she wishes, but sometimes the images end up speaking for themselves.

We may not know exactly "why" they point that way or why they were made that way. But immersing ourselves in this truth is a catapult to the magnificence that all this we live in is much more magical and mysterious than we have been able to comprehend.

Is there INTELLIGENT life on other planets?

It would seem that after all that we have discussed in previous chapters this question would already be more than answered, however, we will try to answer it concretely with a little more precise information on the subject.

From a physical side, based on statistics and probabilities, it would be really impossible that there is no life on other planets since there are millions of stars and planetary systems (astronomers estimate that there could be 40 billion planets similar to Earth in the Milky Way).

The point is that, from a biological perspective, it seems even more improbable than probable that there is life on our planet, let alone elsewhere in the cosmos.

What is necessary for life to exist?

For life to be possible, the first thing needed is to find a good location. It is preferable to be on the periphery of a galaxy. In the center of the galaxy, the stellar density is higher and the chances of being hit by a supernova are greater. The Sun is not only in the right place, but also has the good fortune to be in a clear neighborhood, which minimizes the risk of gamma-ray emissions.

Next, a suitable star is needed, a star that does not consume its fuel too quickly, because life needs a long time to appear and develop.

In addition, it should not be a very young star, because the composition of these stars is generally hydrogen and helium, and other elements necessary for life are missing. Nor should it be too small a star, because then the habitable zone is too close to the star, which means that the planets are anchored by its gravity and do not rotate on themselves, as happens to the Moon and the Earth.

Thus, one side of the planet has temperatures of several hundred degrees, because it is always sunny, and the other, which never gets starlight, is icy.

As it is important that the star is well located within the galaxy, it is also important that the planet is well located with respect to the star, because if it is too close the water vaporizes, but on the other hand, too far away and it freezes.

The planet has to be rocky if it is a gas planet, because if it is a gaseous planet it is useless. The planet must also have a molten core to generate a magnetic field that protects it from cosmic radiation and solar wind. For this, a certain mass is required.

It is estimated that Mars during its first billion years had liquid water and a moderate temperature. However, being small (about half the size of Earth), the heat soon dissipated, the core solidified and ceased to generate a magnetic field to protect it. Without such protection, the solar wind blew away most of the planet's atmosphere.

A planet that is too large is not suitable either, because the atmospheric pressure would be too strong. Some astronomers estimate that the ideal mass would be in the range 0.2-10 times the mass of the Earth.

What if there are many planets that do meet some characteristics?

As an example, we have the discovery of Gliese 581g in 2010.

The planet Gliese 581g, according to astronomers, is at a distance from its star that allows it to have an optimal temperature for liquid water to be present on its surface or at least at a shallow depth.

Among its characteristics, they point out that its temperature ranges between minus 31° and minus 12° Celsius, it has gravity, its orbital period is just over 36 days, its mass is between 3.1 and 4.3 Earth masses and, in addition, the attraction of the star Gliese 581 means that it always has a light side and a dark and cold side. Therefore, they point out that the most likely area to have life would be the one closest to the boundary between day and night.

Gliese 581g was the cue for astronomers, astrophysicists and researchers to start thinking more seriously about the idea that there really are many more planets with Earth-like characteristics than previously thought, and that there may be more life in the universe than we are able to assimilate.

But what about intelligent life?

Life can form on planets similar to Earth, but intelligent life is another matter. Finding microorganisms may be fine, but what we really want to know is the existence or not of other beings like us or even more intelligent (or well, less developed).

Can the most intelligent beings be from Saturn?

I did not see the importance of touching this subject when I was researching, but then I remembered something I read in the book "The Law of One" already mentioned, where Ra (extraterrestrial being that answers the questions) commented that the Eighth Dimensional beings are found on Saturn, in the zone of the rings that for us is the third density (with densities we refer to the level of consciousness, powers or intelligence of a being or beings).

This will probably sound pretty crazy to you, although nothing we'll see in the book will be sane, but just in case you consider yourself a bit more pragmatic:

The German philosopher Immanuel Kant pointed out that the intelligence of extraterrestrials was proportional to their distance from the Sun. For that reason, there would be enormous variation among the inhabitants of the different planets, from the "clumsy inhabitants of Mercury" to the "ingenious beings of Saturn." Coincidence or truth?

As you may have noticed, thinking about intelligent life on other planets is difficult for the simple reason that at the biological level the only place we can grasp is what happened on Earth, that is, how intelligent life evolves here and particularly how we evolve.

What happens is that we don't even know how we evolved.

The story still goes that it was from the monkey, and that may be relatively true, but only up to a point, since from the last Homo Neardenthalensis to Homo Sapiens there was a huge evolutionary leap in a very short period of time.

If we refrain from the evidence of intelligent extraterrestrial civilizations not recognized at present, but recognized by past human civilizations, it seems that there was divine intervention, or at least, that beings more advanced than us intervened in Earth's history.

Before we close this chapter, let's solve this last very common doubt:

Why is it always retired people who talk about their NASA experiences?

Edgar Mitchell - former NASA astronaut - who holds the record for the longest time working in open space, said in an interview that, for NASA professionals, Air Force pilots and in general anyone in the aerospace and military field it is very difficult to report a UFO, because if they do so they risk losing their credibility and their job.

This is why many wait until his retirement to speak out.

In September 2006, the Shuttle Atlantis, during the STS-115 mission, was delayed 24 hours on its return to Earth by a UFO that came between the spacecraft and the Earth's atmosphere. During the mission, the crew also witnessed other UFOs flying nearby: 5 spheres and a tubular object.

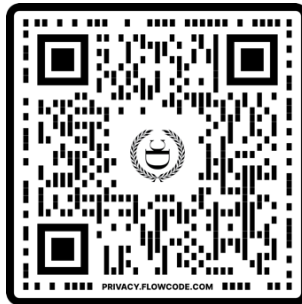

Two of the five spheres seen on STS-115.

Unidentified tubular-shaped object and one other object recorded by the STS 115 mission.

When they finally reached Earth, astronaut Heidemarie Stefanyshyn-Piper wanted to tell the public what she had seen from a press conference broadcast live on FOX, CNN and NBC. But something strange happened: at the moment of making the revelation, she fainted. He stands up again and again, something strange happens to him and he faints again. This UFO experience that the shuttle crew members had during that mission was never talked about again.

If you would like to see this video for yourself, scan the QR code below:

Were these fainting spells natural, caused by emotion? Or perhaps, are they some kind of neurological technology used by NASA to ensure that its astronauts do not reveal secret information in the middle of televised press conferences?

I think the truth has always been right under our noses.

What is time? Is time travel possible?

It is what governs our lives and we have absolutely no idea who created it and if it is even a thing.

But what precisely is it that we measure? Is time something that exists physically or is it only in our heads? At first, the answer seems rather obvious - of course time exists - it is constantly unfolding around us and it is very difficult to imagine a universe without it.

If we ask ourselves the question of what time is, we would already be referring to the fact that time is something, and without mentioning everything you are going to read in this chapter, I dare to say that time is not something, time does not even exist and it is a simple creation of the human consciousness of each one of us.

"The divine illusionism of time, which appears to us like a film, with moving images, changing, when there is a single frame: eternity." -Anonymous

We must be 100% sincere, the past are memories and the future are expectations of what we would like to happen or what someone may say will happen. The only certain thing we have is the now, the present moment. What is difficult to understand about this is that the present moment is eternal, since every moment in which we become aware of what is happening we would be living in the now, hence the reason that time as such does not exist, what exists is the infinite consecution of images that pass without ever stopping in the now.

But what about memories? When I am remembering something, it is something that has already happened, that is, past.

When we remember something that happened to us in the past we are remembering it now, therefore, those past memories exist because your conscious mind is able to remember them at this moment.

To answer the other question it gets a bit more complicated, since asking us about time travel encompasses both past and future time.

Therefore, what you read in the previous paragraph must be questioned.

Is time only the present moment?

Although the answer is still yes, the human mind still has the capacity to remember those events that happened prior to what it is experiencing at this very moment, and it also has the capacity to create through imagination and visualization situations that have not yet occurred.

So... time travel does exist.

Albert Einstein (who we will talk about later) has been one of the most prominent scientists who have focused on this subject, since he introduced very interesting theories. Over the years many other scientists have continued to investigate and it was not until very recently that it was really proven that time dilation (of which Einstein spoke) is a completely real phenomenon.

Time dilation basically means that time passes more slowly for a moving clock than for a static one. The force of gravity also affects the difference in elapsed time. Because gravity and velocity are related, the more gravity and the more velocity there is, the greater the difference in time. Example: Black holes.

But if what we want is to travel in time and not die on the way, we'd better stick with the option of increasing the speed.

One of the options for this would be a wormhole, also known as the Einstein-Rosen bridge. Along with physicist Nathan Rosen, Einstein suggested the existence of wormholes in 1935, and although none have been discovered, many scientists have contributed their own theories about how they might work.

Something that has been verified thanks to space programs is that the ticking sound of the clocks on the International Space Station can be heard a little slower than those on Earth.

Since the station moves faster and is not affected by gravity, time moves faster. This is also the reason why clocks on Earth are not accurate, since the effect of time dilation means that time moves slower the closer one is to the Earth's surface.

A better example would be with satellite GPS. The GPS chip in your cell phone works because there are 24 satellites around the planet that triangulate your location based on the time it takes for information to travel to and from the device.

However, in building the system, the scientists learned that the atomic clocks on the satellites walk a little faster, as they are moving at 14,484 km/hr in orbit. To be more specific, they lose 8 microseconds a day.

It seems to be imperceptible, but it is enough to err with the location. For this very reason, GPS technology makes adjustments to clocks to compensate for time dilation effects.

Because of this, many questions arise, and although at first glance they seem quite crazy, the truth is that they are not at all.

Follow me in this reasoning: If we had a spaceship that flew super-fast, time would pass faster for people on Earth. You could go around the galaxy and come back to Earth in the future.

Einstein's theories for time travel claim that it is impossible to travel back in time, but they are still theories. They may be confirmed or overturned by a future discovery.

So I will close this chapter with the following words from one of my favorite authors:

"When you look at it superficially, it seems that the present moment is one among many, many moments. Each day of your life seems to be made up of thousands of moments in which different things happen. But, if you look deeper, isn't there always only one moment - isn't life always 'this moment'?"

-Eckhart Tolle, The Power of Now

Why is there something instead of nothing?

By asking why, we are conditioning that there must be a reason, and maybe even the universe doesn't have a purpose for being, so let's change why to how.

How is it that there is something instead of nothing?
How is it that something comes out of nothing?

To start with this we have to take into account the most popular theory to date: The Big Bang, although it may be highly questioned.

The Big Bang also had no reason to exist and even how it came about goes against all logical explanations, since this explosion supposedly occurred because there began to be more matter than antimatter.

On a mental level, we have to keep in mind that we would not ask this question if we did not exist or were not conscious and capable of thinking.

As far as we can affirm, at the biological level we are the only living beings that have reasoning, "we are intelligent".

If we did not exist, nothing would exist in our reality, but everything could also continue to exist since we are not the only living beings here; the thing is that other beings (as far as we know) do not ask themselves these kinds of questions.

Therefore, if we are able to ask ourselves that question, it is because there is something instead of nothing, but we are not yet able to even imagine, much less prove, that nothing exists.

At the level of consciousness we still do not understand that something can be produced out of nothing, since apart from going against physics it also goes against our ability to think.

The strength of this issue is that whether it is demonstrable or not, whether it is credible or not, the only reality we have is that everything came out of nothing.

Do you remember Lavoisier's Law? Energy is neither created nor destroyed, it is only transformed.

The universe is energy, billions of particles at the quantum level make it up. So?

This law would tell us that the universe always existed, because energy could not be created out of nothing.

And according to Taoist cosmogony, before the creation of the manifested universe there was a state of total emptiness. In that primordial state, nothing moved. The relative concept of time had no application in that primordial state, since there was nothing to compare it to. Everything was a void.

But the first thing we feel like affirming is that it was created, that the universe exists and we do not know how.

At this point, which is not really getting anywhere, it seems that the most sensible thing to do is not to give any thought to this question. We cannot really know why, much less how it was created.

There are very good theories formulated by the best scientists and researchers of all times, there are even laws, but from my point of view, although they seem to be close to the truth, they are far from an absolute truth.

Perhaps it is important to begin to see with different eyes all this that we know as possible or not possible. Perhaps, everything came out of nothing and it is the truth. Maybe nothing came out of nothing because in reality nothing has ever started and nothing has ever ended. Everything that is, simply is.

My opinion on a historical account: The Bible

The Bible is for the believers the word of God, for being undoubtedly for these its divine inspiration. It is an eminently spiritual book and speaks about the history of humanity, its creation, its fall into sin and its salvation, and explains how the Creator God has related, relates and will relate to human beings. In the same way, the Bible exposes the attributes and character of God.

But the Bible is not the only religion there is.

The rabbinic considers the Talmud as the source of doctrine, while the Karaites defend since the 8th century the Tanach as the only source of faith.

In previous chapters we answered questions that can be used to question the existence or not of God, but I will not focus on that since, in my opinion, with the material of the previous questions everyone can formulate his own answer about the existence or not of something.

My opinion is specifically about the book The Bible, not about what is said there.

I must be honest with you, I have never read the Bible, I have only heard, seen and read enough to understand its provenance and arguments.

I think that, like the Divine Comedy, the Bible is a literary account that lacks scientific foundations, but if it lacks anything, it lacks faith in those who believe in what it says. So could it be true?

There's a phrase I used to use a lot until I realized it wasn't quite right: "if many people think/do something they can't be wrong".

And the truth is, yes, they can.

Why do I believe this? Because the same thing happens with gossip or word-of-mouth lies.

When we read something and then tell it, we run a very high risk of distorting the information because of two factors: 1. how well we are able to tell it and 2. how well the other person can understand us.

The Bible is a very old text that has passed through millions of mouths and ears, from generation to generation.

It has been written in 2,303 different languages. What can assure us that it says in each book exactly the same thing without interference? What can assure us that each person who reads it understands exactly the same thing?

Not to mention each person who has transcribed it.

I consider myself neither a believer nor an atheist, I just question what is out there and formulate my own ideas. It is not about being credible or not, it is about what each one believes.

I am also not at all against The Bible because I believe it has helped keep the world's population docile and submissive for thousands of years, which to some extent is a good thing (I refer to the 10 commandments).

But beyond that, we can question it, just as we question scientific laws and theories.

The biggest mistake is to fall into an absolute truth, which does not let you see all the worlds that also exist.

It is necessary to know how to accept uncertainties and investigate, not to create comforting lies and defend them without any proof or support.

"Let us suppose for a moment that you are right, and that the Bible is indeed the infallible word of the one true God. So what do we make of the Koran, the Talmud, the Book of Mormon, the Vedas, the Avesta, and the Egyptian Book of the Dead? Aren't you tempted to say that such texts are complex fictions created by flesh-and-blood humans (or perhaps by demons?) And how does the reader regard the divinity of Roman emperors like Augustus and Claudius? The Roman Senate claimed to have the power to turn men into gods, and then expected the subjects of the empire to worship these gods. Wasn't this a fiction?"

-Excerpt from the book "21 lessons for the 21st century".

In the end, I don't know if there are many Gods or just One, but I do believe that we are all One. So partitioned or not, separate or not, we are part of the same whole.

Whether it is the Bible, A Course in Miracles or the Talmud, the truth is the same for all: we are love.

Is there a single supreme being?

This question seems complicated, but it has a small detail, it uses the word "unique", so, to try to answer it we must see if there are several supreme beings, and by refuting or affirming this we will be able to calmly answer this question.

What is history and even the time in which we live seems to indicate without a doubt the existence of many supreme beings in various cultures (we could call them Gods), so as a short answer would be that no, there is not a single supreme being.

The real question is to answer whether it exists or not. We have already talked about existence in two chapters, so we only have to play with words to try to answer, although as far as I see it, there is no logical, objective or true answer to that question.

The question of the existence or non-existence of something superior is already unnecessary, because the answer is beyond our logical and imaginative comprehension, and now the question of the existence of a single supreme being is even more illogical and unimaginative.

We could stay with the tales of ancient civilizations, believe in any of them to have an answer or we can believe in none of them and have an answer as well.

If there is one thing that has been proven beyond a shadow of a doubt, it is that everything is energy.

The complicated part is that, if we resort to the existence of a Supreme Being, Omnipresent and Omnipotent, how do we explain the existence of this being?

Perhaps, if everything is energy, consequently, that being would also be energy, and energy can neither be created nor destroyed, only transformed. Which brings us to the chapter of time where only the eternal present exists.

Is a supreme being or god infinite energy without beginning or end?

As a course in miracles says: God Is, and nothing else is.

NOITSEUQ 13

Everything is done in a perfect way: destiny or chance?

I decided to use the word "everything" to literally refer to absolutely everything we know; basically referring to the universe and our body.

Previously we said that the conditions for the Earth to harbor life were very scarce and that this was one of the reasons why biologists doubted the existence of life elsewhere.

It is true, we also said that probabilistically there are millions of opportunities for this to happen, and that even astrologically planets similar to ours have already been found. Even so, whether it is our planet or another one that resembles it, there are things that seem to be made in a perfect way so that in its consequence other events also perfect occur.

It is as if in the immensity of chaos, paradoxically, perfection reigns.

It is because of these issues that religious believers always cling to their creator gods, because it seems like a fairy tale where magic does exist, since there is no explanation beyond what is known to understand such issues.

We have nowhere to start, so coming up with an answer without a starting point is the most complicated thing we can think of to do.

Here goes the attempt:

We all have beliefs, sometimes individualistic and many others with a group of people, but they are beliefs.

If all the perfect creation of the universe and of the human being happened thanks to destiny, we would assume that everything is already destined to happen, that everything happens just like that; on the other hand, if we choose to believe in coincidences, at least, we would be giving the universe room to be what it is, a chaos where everything seems to happen randomly, by chance.

I would like to add the term causality, as it helps us to put the two together.

It is true that everything seems to happen randomly, although it also seems to be that there is a destiny and everything happens because it must happen that way. But also everything has a cause of being, and consequently produces an effect: causality.

Simple word play, far from the absolute truth. Perhaps even the answer cannot be described with the words we use today.

The astonishing perfection in chaos

The human body is a true machine, which is normally calibrated to perfection for the preservation of "homeostasis" or "balance" through the joint work of numerous systems: a nervous system, with the brain and spinal cord as its main parts, which send signals to other systems of the body to control their functioning; a cardiac system, with the heart and blood vessels as the main players, which are responsible for transporting blood with oxygen and nutrients to all the cells of the organism, and for carrying waste from these to the lungs; an endocrine system, which secretes hormones from different glands to act on specific target cells that will bring about a desired effect in the organism.

The complex mechanisms by which these and other systems (such as the digestive, respiratory and immune systems) act and allow a body to maintain its state of health is thanks to the teamwork exercised by the basic functional unit of our body: the cell; although its size is small, its quantity is numerous, consisting of 100 million gears working together so that the various systems that make up this machine that is the body do so harmoniously.

Even more perfection.

The golden number

This number is also known as the divine number. It is found in the creation of absolutely everything we know, since it is not only in geometric figures but also in all of nature.

I introduce it also in this chapter so that you can see even more how perfect everything seems to be created.

1- In the human body. It turns out that the quotient between the height of man and the distance from the navel to the tip of the hand is the golden ratio.

Perhaps the most striking is the one related to the navel: if we divide the total height of a man by the distance from the navel to the feet, we obtain the golden ratio. In dental research it has been shown that the teeth grow according to the golden ratio. In our hands the phalanges are in golden ratio 6.

2- In the plastic arts. It appears in the 5th century BC in Athens, the Greeks knew it and used it in architectural and sculptural designs. One of the most famous constructions in which it has been used is the Parthenon.

We also find the proportions of the golden rectangle and its sections in the UN Building in New York.

3- In music. In several of Mozart's piano sonatas, the proportion between the development of the theme and its introduction is as close as possible to the golden ratio. Although Beethoven is not known to be aware of this, in his Fifth Symphony, he distributes the theme following the golden section. In instruments such as the piano, since it is made up of seven octaves arranged in increasing order from low to high. Thus, the first six numbers of the Fibonacci Succession, very similar to the golden ratio, appear in a piano octave, which consists of 13 keys: 8 white keys and 5 black keys, in groups of 2 and 3.

4- In mathematics. The golden number or golden ratio is present in all regular or semi-regular geometric objects in which there is pentagonal symmetry, which are pentagons or in which the square root of five appears in some way. It is related to the Platonic solids, in particular the icosahedron and the dodecahedron, whose dimensions are given in terms of the golden ratio.

5- In nature. There are many elements related to the golden section or the Fibonacci sequence that have a great similarity. The arrangement of flower petals, the distribution of leaves on a stem.

The ratio between the veins of the leaves of trees. The ratio between the thickness of the main branches and the trunk, or between the main branches and the secondary branches. The number of spirals of a pine cone.

These numbers are elements of the Fibonacci sequence and the quotient of two consecutive elements tends to the golden number. In the number of petals in flowers there are for example flowers with 3, 5 and 8 petals and also with 13, 21, 34, 55, 89 and 144.

It is in the DNA and we can discover it in countless other examples.

It seems totally crazy because it is totally true and proven, everything points to what I said in previous paragraphs, a complete perfection in chaos.

For whom has this perfect and wonderful world been created? Can we still say that everything is a mere coincidence? Are we sure that everything around us is not perfect?

This is where the word that unifies everything comes in: synchronicity.

What does this mean?

The concept of synchronicity was defined by Carl Jung in 1964 in his work The Interpretation of Nature and the Psyche, as -the coincidence in time of two or more events, not causally related to each other, whose significant content is identical or similar.

Perhaps, behind all the veil of fate or chance/causality, is the "synchronous universe" dancing in perfect oneness among all its parts, being one and being what it is. Like God.

What are dimensions, who created them and how many of them exist?

From the spatial side, dimensions are the metrics that physicists use to describe reality. For example: humans are in the third dimension because they are able to observe width, length and depth.

But Albert Einstein in 1905 introduced a new theory: spatial relativity, introducing the fourth dimension. Time, something indispensable to locate an object in space and at a given time, complementing the other three dimensions we know.

This would explain the universe as we (humans) know it, since we can see everything in the third dimension and even theoretically we are in the fourth dimension.

As we commented in chapter 9, time is a continuous succession of reality, we see everything passing as "in a straight line" which would be the form of representation that the fourth dimension would have.

The issue of dimensions is very extensive, but as we are going to question everything it is not necessary to delve into all the theories that exist, even so, we must take them into account, since nowadays they are the closest thing to an answer.

Let's look at string theory. This theory aims to unify two main theories that describe how the universe works: general relativity (which applies to very large objects) and quantum mechanics (which applies to small ones).

According to string theory there are seven more dimensions besides the four mentioned, giving a total of eleven dimensions. Scientists realized that in a four-dimensional universe this theory would not be possible, but once they modified the mathematics to include ten dimensions (eleven with time) the equations worked.

The fifth dimension according to string theory tells us that it is a world slightly different from ours, of which we could evaluate similarities and differences. Basically, these are "alternate worlds" where, for example, by changing just one decision in our life, everything would be different.

The sixth dimension is the plane of all possible worlds with the same initial conditions and is explained as follows: in this plane it is possible to travel between different realities of the fifth dimension without the need to go to the past, basically because there is no past, present or future; we are all in all of them and we can go to any of them whenever we want and in different realities.

For example: How could we go from one timeline to another, without having to travel great distances? Exactly as it happened in the passage from two to three dimensions: by folding the universe, and for this we need the sixth dimension.

The seventh dimension is a plane of all possible worlds with different initial conditions, something similar to the sixth, but in this case the beginning is different in each plane.

In the eighth dimension there are different universes compressed into one, which is necessary for travel in the seventh dimension. These universes originated differently from ours and the matter is different from what we know.

In the ninth dimension all worlds are possible, starting with all possible initial conditions and physical laws, which are completely different from what we know today.

In the tenth dimension the possibilities are infinite and in graphic representation, it would be simply a point, as the beginning, but to obtain a different point and draw a line and thus continue with the process, we need to imagine other possible infinities and this can no longer be done. We have considered all the possible beginnings of the universe, and all the possible evolutions of the universe, it is not possible to continue.

Well, these would be the dimensions according to string theory, and they are the spatial dimensions, but there is another side of the coin: the dimensions of our consciousness.

The 7 spiritual dimensions

The dimensions in these levels are governed by the levels of energetic vibration and their respective levels of understanding that every living being acquires progressively in life in which his life experience gives him a knowledge that expands his consciousness. They are levels of understanding, knowledge and energetic liberation.

FIRST DIMENSION

The first spiritual dimension is the creative one, since it is, at the quantum level, where energy becomes matter. It is in this dimension that everything we know today, life and the cosmos in general, is formed.

This dimension is the matrix of existence, so it is connected to the seventh dimension in a cyclical way.

SECOND DIMENSION

The second level is the elemental dimension, where the basic and purely instinctive life is formed in this state.

This dimension is where most animals and plants exist.

THIRD DIMENSION

The third dimension is the physical world. This is where the human being dwells. In this stage of the seven dimensions, we understand ourselves as rational and individual beings capable of having our own identity and perceptions.

This dimension is considered to be the most fundamental as it is where we learn self-awareness of the whole and live our personal experiences.

FOURTH DIMENSION

This is the last dimension where we are still physical beings. In this dimension we are said to be able to perceive beyond the world that we see and that surrounds us in an obvious way. It is known as the astral plane.

We understand feelings, emotions and dreams. Depending on the intensity with which they are perceived, our development will be leaning more towards the third or first dimension. In it, we also understand that our actions affect the whole we inhabit.

When a person dies, his or her consciousness moves into the fourth dimension, crossing "a light at the end of a tunnel". This has been described by millions of people who have had close encounters with death as discussed in chapter five.

In this dimension is the so-called "dream world" or world of dreams and is known as the passage from the fourth to the fifth dimension. It is the frequency in which we begin to be aware that we are not only a physical body, and we begin to perceive beyond the physical senses.

FIFTH DIMENSION

This state of consciousness is eternity. It is said that this is where the ascended masters and spirit guides are alone. It is the dimension of energy where we can merge with beings who vibrate at our frequency to form a higher dimensional being.

It is the dimension where we remember who we are, and awaken our inner wisdom. We go from being mortal bodies to being infinite souls thanks to the elevated level of collective wisdom we have developed. In this state, we will be able to choose to become the guide for other souls in the previous dimensions.

SIXTH DIMENSION

It is in this dimension that one takes responsibility for the Whole and is the Whole. In the sixth dimension, the state of consciousness will allow us to conceive the cells of the first three dimensions.

It is also referred to as the dimension of enlightenment, known to mystics as the true reality, Buddhists call it "nirvana".

SEVENTH DIMENSION

At this level of vibration the energy takes precedence over the physical, that is to say, the spiritual body takes precedence over the physical body. It is the frequency of total integration of the being. We can only ascend to this state when we are pure love and our energy vibrates in this way.

In this dimension there are no forms, only colors and sounds. However, and although at this level we only know the one that is formed with others, we are also able to become aware of the states we are passing through.

Each new level of consciousness and each higher dimension will be unveiled either collectively or individually as the being evolves.

Although I have named you these seven spiritual dimensions, it is said that there are more, even 13, but our vast human understanding allows us to go as far as the seventh.

These dimensions exist in the here and now, although not all of us can perceive each of them.

As you will see, the spatial dimensions of physics and the spiritual dimensions are not so different, since at the quantum level they have a similar beginning.

What if spatial dimensions are a confirmation of spiritual dimensions?

Both speak of a beginning with a cyclical end, and both describe that it is energy that becomes matter and this is what has happened since we have consciousness.

Because that's the point. All theories are created by humans, with the scientific method yes, but by humans.

And these things are achieved thanks to a certain level of consciousness that allows us to reason, think, and deduce according to what we observe.

But if humans did not exist, how would we know about the dimensions? Who assures us that they exist? How would we create them?

It's not that we go through life making things up, but maybe if we didn't have consciousness nothing would exist.

Therefore, spiritual dimensions are not crazy at all, and spatial dimensions seem to confirm what already exists according to our consciousness, even if they are theories.

NOITSEUQ 15

Why is one part of our brain known as "reptilian"? Are we reptilian?

The fact that one part of the brain is known as "reptilian" is due to the neuroscientist MacLean, who in 1952 divided the human brain into three parts: the reptilian complex, the limbic system and the neocortex.

According to McLean, the reptilian complex, being the first to appear, would be the structure that carries out the most basic and most important functions to survive in the here and now, it is like the part that works by instinct and helps us to survive, it is like the impulses.

The reptilian brain, being the most primitive part, is also related to the addiction to power, where the only thing that matters is oneself. Remember the ego?

Another important detail is that we share this same brain with other mammals and reptiles.

We won't go into the other two parts because it's not relevant, I want you to keep this for now.

But if you've ever heard it said that we are "reptiles" it may not be as untrue as you thought.

Where did the Reptilians come from and what role do they play?

Reptilians "came out" as a theory, where supposedly their role is to rule the Earth since they are among the high command, something that would not be too crazy if we know that the reptilian brain that all of us have is what it craves most: power.

There are several theories surrounding this subject, but the most popular and well-known one says that the reptilians are aliens coming from the Alpha Draconis solar system, and the ones on our planet live in subway tunnels.

As much as we talk about theories, we must take history into account: ancient civilizations point to a reptilian being as an evil deity, the Aztecs with Quetzalcoatl, in Athens there is Cecrops, in India the Naga, in Africa the Chitauris, in Egypt there would be Sobek and others believe they were the ancient astronauts; extraterrestrials who descended from the sky, the famous Anunnaki (a subject we delve into in Know the only truth).

It is said that Sumeria could be the possible origin of the reptilians, this city is known as the cradle of all civilizations. According to the Sumerians (as well as the Egyptians, Mayans or Aztecs) their gods came down to earth from the sky, long before the arrival of mankind. They called them "Anunnaki" and in the Bible they also appear with the name Nephilim, although some erroneous translations of the term call them "giants" when in reality it is "those who came down from the heavens to the earth".

Humans viewed these beings as gods, as they were intelligent, possessed many technologies and knowledge and had great longevity, although they were mortal.

It is curious how today we are so enclosed in a bubble that the first theory is already conspiratorial, and the person who defends it is crazy.

I totally agree that a civilization can invent gods, but you have to doubt when there are not one, but several civilizations thousands of miles away that tell similar stories. And to add to this, they carve on stone and walls giant sculptures honoring these beings that came down from the sky.

In the Hathor temple at Dendera, Egypt, humans of reptilian nature along with pharaohs can be found on the walls. The Hopi Indians in North America tell that an alien BAK'TI race genetically manipulated animals and created human beings.

Oral traditions teach that the extraterrestrial BAK'TI race eventually lost control over the human race to another race that were depraved reptilians. The Hopi tribe calls the reptilian race the Sheti, or "snake brothers," who live underground.

The Cherokee and other American tribes also refer to reptilian or other reptilian races. In ancient Mexico there was a king named Quetzalcoatl, which means bird-serpent. He was the god of the stars who brought civilization and knowledge of the cosmos to the people of Central America.

Yucatan texts known as the "chilaam balaam" say that the first inhabitants of the region were known as the "people of Chanesh" which means the people of the serpent. They were ruled by a king called "Itznamnam" which means lizard and is depicted as half human and half snake.

5000 years ago the Olmecs erected statues of their gods on protective spirals of gigantic serpents.

In ancient times, their role was that of Gods, in the present, nothing is known about them other than speculations and "conspiracy" theories that are not relevant to comment on, not because they are true or false, but because the question in this case has already been answered.

Before closing this chapter, I want to tell you about the most surprising case of "reptilian human" that I have "seen" so far. It is another of Nacho Rojo's great investigations.

There is a Russian organization called "Allatra" where in videos uploaded to YouTube -with very good quality, by the way- they tell and transmit their thoughts about humanity, the world and the universe in general.

In his videos there are almost always the same three people talking about a topic, two women and a man, and it was in one of these videos that something never expected happened: one of these women turned her eyes for a few milliseconds where reptilian eyes were observed.

After that first video, there are even others where he does it again and they themselves talk about the reptile theme, without affirming anything, but implying everything.

This is very beautiful to see as they do not hide anything and show this anomaly if you could say in a very natural way and worthy of observing.

Fortunately this case is being well investigated by Nacho, however, there are also other famous people who have had this sudden "transformation" in their eyes, very similar to Allatra's case, as is the case of Miley Cyrus (I invite the reader to search for videos on YouTube and formulate their opinion).

The reader may not be very clear about the answer to this question, but in the following questions we will address the issue of "who is behind it all" from other perspectives.

Remember, to formulate one truth, you have to question all of them, even the one you believe.

NOITSEUQ 16

Why within the human race are there other types of races?

We are talking about the Bible, but since it is the most popular book on the genesis of mankind, I have to ask the question: How is it possible that, from Adam and Eve, two beings with "pure race" could have children with such different characteristics?

We know that there are people with white, brown, yellow complexions; striated or larger eyes.

In the books of cabals and also in the Talmud it is said that the climate makes a person have some characteristics or others; and in the treatise of Sanhedrin we are told that the "Eternal" divided people by languages and lands and that they also abruptly changed people's characteristics.

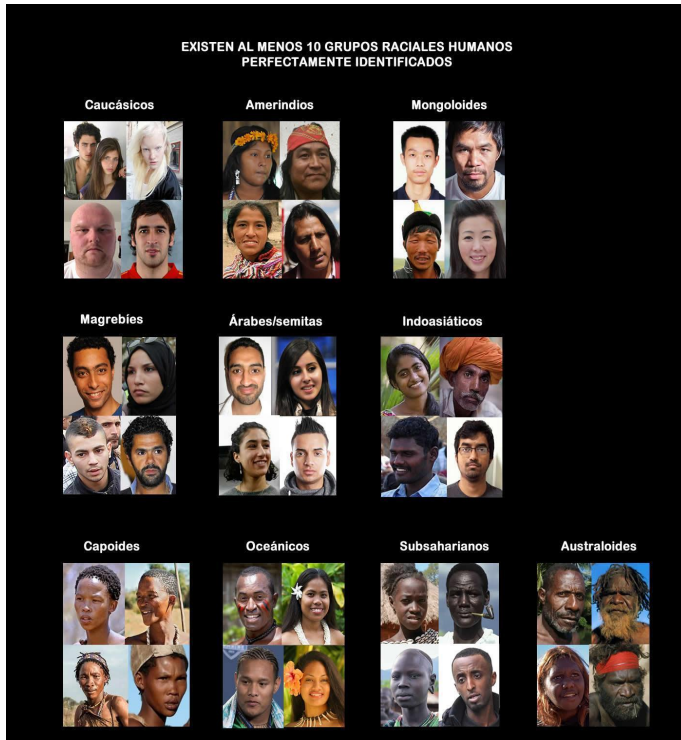

Scientists on the other hand do not agree on how many and which racial subspecies there are, and this is because the humans that could have been purebred became extinct thousands of years ago in the Paleolithic era, although in southern Africa there are some pure aborigines.

Depending on where we are in the world, we will have more genetic contribution from one race than from another, which is also why the differences are still very deep-rooted.

And the simplest explanation of why we have different skin colors is due to melanin, which is responsible for giving us that lighter or darker pigment. The darker color is an evolutionary response of adaptation to the environment over thousands of years: where there is more solar radiation people will have darker skin because to protect their organs they will produce more melanin.

That is why it is said that those of us with whiter skin have "bleached skin".

The closest we have is this:

Looking at this picture, the following question comes to my mind: why is each race so different? And not only at the level of physical traits, but also at the level of physical conditions and mental intelligence, as well as cultural behaviors (not to mention language).

How could this have been possible?

Would there be any way to explain this without resorting to the answer that we all come from a single creator? But if we are all so different, how is it that we can all come from the same place?

The DNA

We all share 99% of the genetic material (Indians, blacks, whites and mestizos) the genes are the same. The differences are in that 1%.

60,000 years ago, only 2,000 generations ago, a small group of African humans set out in search of new lands and gave rise to the great physical and cultural diversity that has colonized the planet today. This was due to an abrupt change of climate in the horn of Africa according to paleoclimatic research, which says that the climate changed from a humid phase called "Green Sahara" to drier conditions than today.

The clues that this was so are found in DNA and this is the path taken by the American researcher Spencer Wells.

How did we migrate and diversify? Genetics tells us that we came from humans who lived in East Africa 60,000 years ago and migrated to Asia, along the coast, until they reached Australia 50,000 years ago. Another wave of emigration, from which most Africans also come, traveled 45,000 years ago to the Middle East and Central Asia and, from there, some went to Europe (about 35,000 years ago) and others to Siberia (20,000 years ago), from where they crossed to America.

So, do we all come from the same place?

The nice thing about this chapter is that we can link it a lot with the previous one, because if I answer this question quickly it would be yes, we all come from the same place, and we even come from reptiles... according to Charles Darwin's evolutionary theory.

In the evolutionary chain of species up to Homo sapiens, millions of years have passed and there are many predecessor species to us. The last species and the origin of what we are today comes from 286 million years ago (the dinosaurs) specifically from the Collitosaurus (reptile).

What if I told you that what I just told you was wrong? We can still go back a little bit further...

It seems that if we go back to 530 million years ago, where we really come from is a fish (Haikouichthys, the first vertebrate fish).

Our body is nothing more than the evolution of the first fish that were able to leave the water and set foot on land.

Do you think we have nothing to do with fish?

Why do our fingers wrinkle when we are in the water for a long time?

This is an automatic reaction of the nervous system. This is so because it is easier to grasp wet objects with wrinkled fingers, it is one of the characteristics of human evolution. The ancestor of today's human beings was an aquatic or semi-aquatic primate already bipedal and with hardly any hair.

In our beginnings, we all started as a life form in a hydrothermal vent underwater. We were a very simple organism called "Luca" as scientists call it.

Our bodies are the result of a 4.6 billion year evolution. And although we seem to have been around for a long time, it was only 3 million years ago that the first primates became aware of their existence and place in the world.

It seems that after knowing this everything is solved, that we are what we are today on our own, without divine or extraterrestrial interruption.

This evolutionary period may have been like this for millions of years, but perhaps it has been interrupted in more recent years, because the evolutionary leap that humanity has achieved does not fit with the records of evolution as they had been occurring.

Where do we come from then?

Microorganisms, fish, reptiles, monkeys, from Africa, it seems that the problem is solved in that order.

Although Charles Darwin may be right and the biological evolutionary process of man has occurred across species, it seems that something still resonates with us.

Many are those who believe that we come from the stars, that we are simply energy, and if we think about it, they are not wrong either.

We have already commented that everything is energy, we are all composed of it. At the quantum level, everything that exists is the same. We are one.

So to answer the question "where do we come from?" we would have to be more specific and analyze in detail every year since the existence of planet Earth, which is quite complicated since there are billions of them.

Perhaps we all come from the same place and have evolved to a certain point. Then beings from other galaxies intervened and we became the conscious beings we are today. Or maybe not. Maybe we just evolved without any intervention.

(Although the latter would not fit with the pyramids around the world, nor with humans having the "alien" blood that we tell you more about in Know the only truth).

There you have it. You have the information now.

NOITSEUQ 17

Who dominates the human race?

Let's think about it, nowadays it is not the most difficult thing in the world to control all humans, and the question already states that we are controlled because that is a no-brainer, we only need to know who are the ones behind everything. Therefore, that is where we will go.

Over the years many things have been said, hundreds of theories have been formulated which link many presidents and world leaders such as Barack Obama, Queen Elizabeth II and many other influential celebrities to be those who are controlled by "the elite" and through them exercise manipulation.

But who are the "elite"?

Specifically, we do not know who they are, but there is enough data that together will give us a very approximate answer.

Reptilians control the world

We cannot overlook the reptilian theme, since as we commented in its respective chapter, for many the "Elite" is reptilian and it is these extraterrestrial beings who control absolutely everything, specifically the high commanders who are the ones who then directly influence the world's population.

As you continue reading this chapter you will become aware of who controls the world and how they do it.

For the moment we are not going to rule out the reptiles, only that we will eventually see a more in-depth response on the subject.

Money, the capitalist system and the richest and most powerful people in the world

We all need money and this is the chain that binds us, but capitalism and consumerism took us to the extreme side years ago.

I am not a person who is against this system, not at all, I enjoy it, but in order to enjoy it you have to wake up.

The thing is that most of the population is asleep: absurd purchases, debts up to the elbows, junk food, excess of entertainment and little knowledge.

There are many ways to wake up and everyone will have their own, maybe it has happened to you with this book, to realize all the things that exist, existed and will exist that no one had ever told you, that is a way to wake up, to also see the other side of the coin.

Others perhaps instead of waking up are overwhelmed with so much information and so few conclusions and prefer to ignore and disregard everything they read here. Each one will go his own way.

The fact is that in order to awaken we only need to become conscious. It is not a matter of believing or not. We can believe things all the time, that is very easy. The question is to discover ourselves, to ask ourselves questions, and to ask really deep questions.

In this case, this book is flooded with generic questions to then derive into smaller but complementary ones, all in order to go deeper and try to "get" to something, even if we don't need to get anywhere.

Capitalism (beyond what is said about it) has managed to keep the entire world population docile, submissive and well controlled. All this through advertisements where every time new clothes, technological devices, accessories, cars, etc. appear, where people are incited to spend and end up getting into debt buying things that many times they did not even want to buy or know they do not need, with the only purpose -let's be honest- to look good.

It's that easy how it works, and if what I just said shocked you, you know where you have a problem then.

As easy as it is, it's also a bit sad. The capitalist system is fine, being rich is fine, having a lot of money and power is also fine (if your aim is to bring a positive change) what is a total shame is how people go out of their way for this, forgetting that the only thing they really have is the present moment, which passes so fast that it seems they don't even have time to live it.

Money is unlimited. Since it stopped being backed by gold a couple of decades ago there is no longer a limit and it is printed in abundant quantities every day, it is for this reason that the economic expansion is becoming more and more brutal, because as millionaires have more, more they can do. And that's exactly why you have to stop chasing after something worthless, mundane and devoid of meaning other than what you want to give it.

There are many people who are making a positive change and helping the planet, but, although the richest are a small percentage of the population, there are quite a few people who have a lot of money power and contacts, so among that percentage there are both sides.

People are usually guided by the Forbes magazine (specialized in the world of business and finance) in which every year the Forbes list is launched, which places in order -depending on the amount of money they own- the richest people in the world.

By this point in the book we have become accustomed to looking at the other side of the coin, so I must tell you that there is something to keep in mind with this magazine.

Although it places the wealthiest people on the planet, millionaires have the possibility if they wish not to appear on it, however, simply by looking at this list we can not conclude anything.

To give you an example, Queen Elizabeth II is known to be the queen of 32 countries and her wealth is estimated at $33 Trillion dollars.

It controls the world's uranium and owns 1/6 of the mainland, but is not on the list.

The three most popular dynasties that control the world: The Rothschilds, the Rockefellers and the Bush Family.

To get into the subject, we have to know that the Bush family is estimated to have a fortune of 300 billion dollars based mainly on oil business since before the Second World War.

In the words of George H.W. Bush (former President of the United States from 1989 - 1993): "We have before us the greatest opportunity to forge ourselves and future generations a new world order, a world that is governed by law, not by the law of the jungle, which governs the conduct of nations. When we get it and we are going to do it. We have an opportunity for this new world order, an order in which a reliable United Nations can develop to keep the peace and fulfill the promises and vision of the founders of the UN".

The next family is the Rothschilds. It is estimated that they have 500 companies in their possession with a declared fortune of 500 billion dollars, much of which they have obtained thanks to great speculations in times of crisis. This family has controlled the world through the world economy, mainly through the economic and financial systems.

Lastly, the Rockefeller family with a fortune of 750 billion dollars and some 600 companies.

Something that was discovered a few years ago that was apparently a well-kept secret is that, as of December 23, 1913, the private Federal Reserve Bank (FED) took over the US. The FED has 12 regional banks throughout the country of the United States.

What's curious about the Federal Reserve?

- It is not Federal (it is not a governmental institution), nor is it a Reserve (it does not maintain any reserve by law).
- It is not a central bank, it is a private bank.
- Their owners are not all Americans (the Rothschilds are from London and Berlin; Lazard from Paris; Israel Moses Seif from Italy; the Kuhn, Loeb and Warburg from Germany) and the Lehman, Goldman, Sachs and Rockefeller families from New York.
- It issues dollars at will.
- The American people are stratospherically indebted to the Fed.

As you will see, the Rothschild and Rockefeller families, as well as other large billionaire families own the Fed.

Now that you know a little about this "Federal Reserve", it's time for you to take a look at the following image.

To find out who controls the world you have to follow the money ladder.

We will describe each link in detail:

At the first level is the citizenry, that is, all of us.

The reality is that only a very small percentage of the world's population has all the wealth in the world, and the other remaining percentage (let's say 99%) is middle and lower class.

In this link of the pyramid are small and medium-sized business owners, ordinary workers and families. The money earned here goes largely to taxes.

At the second level are the governments.

Although one might think that they are the ones who "rule" the world, we are still far from the true throne. This is the level where they are mistakenly believed to control the world.

Governments, like any other institution, need a means to finance themselves. Political parties need to obtain money to fuel their campaigns, which they obtain through financing from large corporations that are at level 3. Once the political party wins, the government can enter into negotiations with large banks or central banks (at level 4 and 5) to obtain funds to carry out their state projects.

Level three: Here are the large corporations.

We all need food, health, goods, energy, water, entertainment, gasoline, etc. and for this, there are these big corporations, creating all the goods we need. But... What happens when these corporations become too powerful?

There is a term used to describe corporations that create large monopolies: Corporatocracy. Thanks to the great fortunes that these companies have amassed, they have a very high purchasing power and are able to finance the political party of their choice. For this reason they are above governments and it is for this reason that it is believed that the giants of the oil, mining or technology industries are the ones that control the world at will.

This is where we all get confused and think that these industries are to blame, but it all comes from much higher up.

The reality is that everything is absolutely controlled to measure, so although we may think we are free we are far from it, because even many of the decisions you have made, even if they are of your own free will, are highly influenced by what they want you to see (algorithms that increasingly know more about your tastes than you do).

From food (toxins, pesticides, toxic minerals in food and water) to education (traditional system so that you never question anything and work for someone else because you have no other choice).

But who funds them? Let's look at level 4.

Level 4: National Banks.

Surely this is no secret to you, but the national banks are in charge of granting low-interest loans to these corporations and obviously, (albeit to a lesser extent) to the government.

The issue is that banks create money out of nothing. When they grant a loan, all they do is to place the amount of the loan in the bank accounts and from there, they start charging interest on an amount that never existed. This is possible thanks to the fractional reserve system that was invented a few years ago, and clearly, it is not necessary to change it.

At level 5 are the Central Banks.

Which family do we have in this link? The Rothschilds, whose banks are private, not public.

A peculiarity is that there are very few countries that do not have these Central Banks (China, Venezuela, Syria, North Korea, etc.) and it also happens that these countries have a leftist government or dictatorship.

What can we say about this?

Suppose that for some reason these countries do not wish to have banks of this family, it is also a great coincidence that these countries are always in a war against the US.

The Sixth Level: World Bank and International Monetary Fund

These institutions are the borrowers of the world. Their function is to lend money to countries to rescue their economies or make them grow. The World Bank specializes mainly in lending to developing countries at zero or fairly low interest rates.

And who are the owners of these institutions? You know, the Rothschilds are majority shareholders of the IMF and full owners of the World Bank.

Seventh level: Central bank of central banks

Central banks are in charge of assisting and regulating the financial actions of national banks. They have a lot of power, but not as much as the international payments bank.

This bank serves as a central bank for all the central banks of the countries that are associated with it. Its main decision-making committee consists of 18 members, who are central bankers. These bankers have in their power to control monetary policy, manage the supply of money to national economies, set interest rates and thus decide the value of our savings and investments. Basically, they have in their hands the ability to decide whether a country grows or not.

Eighth level: Elite bankers

"He who has the money, has the power."

The owners of the most powerful institution, capable of providing money to the central banks of the countries and the banks capable of lending money to entire nations, will indisputably be the owners of the world.

Among the most powerful bankers we have: the Rothschild family, the Rockefeller family, the Morgan family, the Du Pont family, the Bush family.

I hope you remember the three last names I highlighted in bold.

At this point in the pyramid we already know that the elite bankers are the ones who rule the world, but it is time to start asking ourselves what is the purpose? Why do they want to have this control? Is this plan to control humanity directed by human beings like all of us? Could it be that those who have the last word on everything that should be done are extraterrestrial beings?

As I commented earlier, the reptile theme continues to play an interesting role in this issue. And although I don't have much more to tell you, there is something that comes as a ringing conclusion.

It is about an interview that Karen Hudes had 5 years ago. This lady is a former executive of the World Bank, and in the interview she revealed something very strong:

"Because the one at the very core pulling the strings is a different species. It's not the human race. They're called 'Homo capensis.' They have been on Earth alongside humanity, since before this ice age."

For the reader to know: in Peru, specifically in the small town of Paracas, the archaeologist Julio Tello made an amazing discovery in 1928, where he found a cemetery full of tombs of beings with elongated skulls. A total of 300 skulls were found, giving them some 3,000 years of antiquity. Subsequent scientific analysis carried out by the geneticist Brien Foerster, determined that they had a DNA with mutations alien to any human being and that they are not the cause of cranial deformation, presenting only one parietal plate. This type of non-human race is known as Homo capensis.

In one part of the interview Karen also said:

"They must think what kind of motive human beings can have to be traitors to their own kind."

Could it be that everything from the capitalist system to NASA's cover-ups are run by this non-human, apparently reptilian race?

If this doesn't sound shocking to you yet, just wait for the last topic we'll talk about in the book.

Responding to the last question posed, it seems that everything points to the fact that we are controlled, and not only by humans like us, but by something superior to them.

The Illuminati's secret plan in letters

Surely you have heard the word Illuminati (from the Latin Illuminati), but let's see where all this mystery comes from to understand it and then show you what is really shocking.

First of all and to wind up the threads, the deepest plan of the Illuminati is to create a New World Order. Do you remember the words of George H.W. Bush (former president of the United States)? Bush (former president of the United States)? "We have the opportunity for a New World Order".

In this new regime there would be a few who would rule the entire planet, since only a few have full enlightenment.

Who are the Illuminati?

Although it is a secret lodge and it is very difficult to know, there are some clues.

Most of the members of this group are very powerful and influential people, wealthy bankers, top political leaders and the business elite, oil barons, and the heads of large multinational corporations and the pharmaceutical industry.

The Royal Family of England, i.e. Queen Elizabeth II and the House of Windsor, are said to be high-level representatives who control the upper strata of the New World Order.

Their structure and the way they function is basically like a five-level pyramid: at the bottom are the entertainment stars. Then come the religious leaders, the bankers and the politicians that we believe we are free to choose, then the big multinationals, and finally them, who create and circulate the money and rule behind it all.

To test the validity of this last paragraph, I invite the reader to do further research on: Michael Jackson, Katy Perry, Jim Carrey, Macaulay Culkin and Russell Brand. In addition, also on terrorist attacks such as the World Trade Center or the J.F.K. assassination.

Where can we find the Illuminati symbol?

Believe it or not, it is much closer than you could have ever imagined.

The Great Seal of the United States appears on the current U.S. dollar bill and is composed of the "All-Seeing Eye", also called the "Eye of Providence".

Many people associate this symbol with being of Christian origin, although it is not mentioned anywhere in the Bible. The origin of this symbol is found in the symbolism of the "Eye of Horus", an ancient Egyptian god representing the Sun.

Egyptians... we had already talked about them.

The closest thing to the Illuminati and the new world order as we know it.

By knowing I only mean seeing what they want us to see.

The Bilderberg Club

This club also happens to be made up of bankers, politicians, royalty and newspaper owners who meet every year behind closed doors and discuss the serious problems facing humanity and what to do about them.

The purpose of the Bilderberg Club was to "tie a knot around a common political line between the United States and Europe in opposition to Russia and communism" and, if possible "to control the world economy among Club members."

Something curious that has been said about this club is that: "In the secret meetings of the Bilderberg Club the destiny of the world is decided. If you don't have the honor of being invited, you simply don't exist, you are nobody in the world establishment".

The objective of this select entity is to end personal freedoms and manipulate citizens through fear and the action of the media, controlled by its members. Their goal is to establish a global government at the UN, a single currency and a single religion.

Unlike the Illuminati group, the Bilderberg Club announces its meetings (held every year) on its website, i.e. they tell us what they will talk about, where they will be held and who will attend (about 130 people).

As we said, they show us what they want us to see, or what we can see according to them. It is impossible to know exactly who attends and what specific topics will be discussed, much less can we know what they say and what decisions they make. The meetings are held behind closed doors and no one can talk about it.

Now that we know a little more about the secret sects that control the world, let's talk about the title of this last chapter and the most shocking thing of all:

The truth of the Illuminati letters

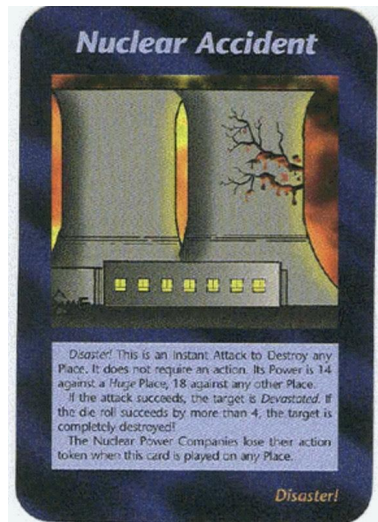

The theme of the Illuminati cards is very basic, but it hides behind it what seems to be the answer to everything we have seen so far.

This card game was created by the American Steve Jackson, which consists of each player being one of the great conspiracy groups of the world, such as the Society of Discord, the Illuminati, the Gnomes of Zurich, etc. As the game is played, all players will add to their playing area groups represented by more cards with which to become more powerful and thus achieve their goal of victory, different for each conspiracy.

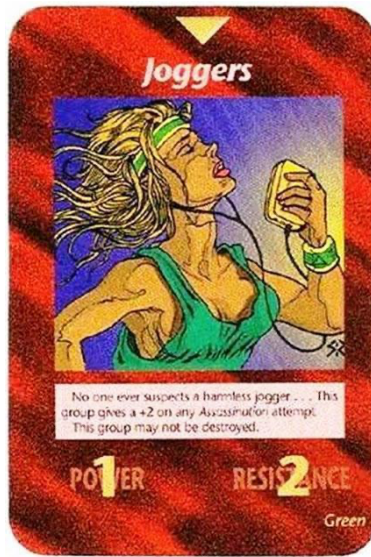

The game was first published in 1982 and had several versions, but the version published in 1995 went down to posterity for the apparent accuracy of its predictions. Each card has a meaning that we will see below, but first we must know this:

- The letters above the letter are the name.
- Each card has a description, but they rarely say anything important.

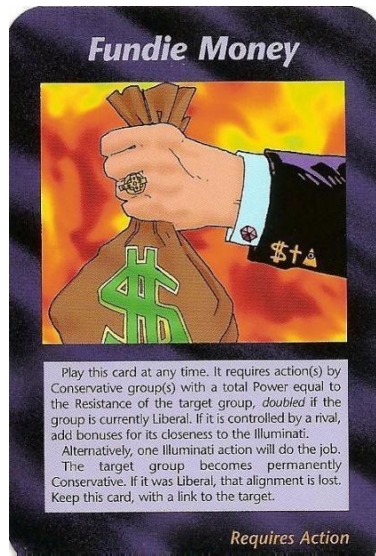

- Images usually always have a hidden message.
- The numbers below the description are only the power of the card that simply has to do with the game.
- Each card has a color. The purple ones are important.

Prediction of the Fukushima nuclear accident at the Fukushima Nuclear Power Plant on March 11, 2011?

Detail on the card: Triangle on the girl's bracelet. No one would suspect anything from an unarmed runner. This card predicted the bombing that occurred at a marathon in Boston in 2013. (31 years earlier)

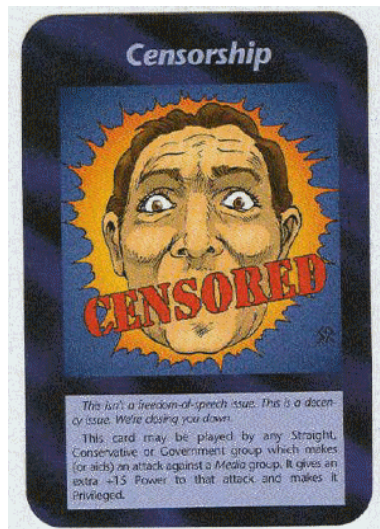

By way of speculation and with what we have seen so far, we could understand it as the elite wanting to eliminate physical money. Why would they do that? In doing so we would have to use digital money, which would make it easier to control us. The funny thing is that this is happening (cryptocurrencies). Other details that corroborate this from the chart are that there is fire behind the exchange, which would indicate how the money would "burn" or "disappear."

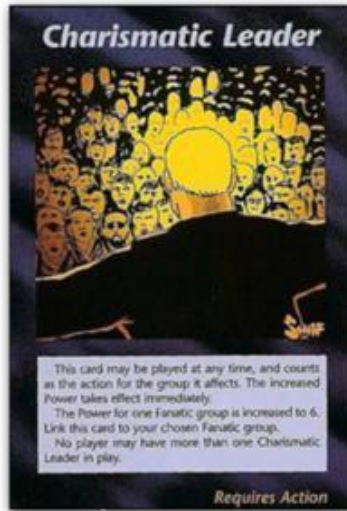

The letter "CHIP" can be linked to the new introduction of RFID chips that are now being introduced as ways to make our purchases. It is a chip that is implanted in the fleshy part of the skin, between the thumb and forefinger, which would give them absolute control over the population. This would give them absolute control over the population. What happens if you choose not to get this chip? They would have you as a criminal and you would not be able to buy anything.

The funny thing about this letter is that it is already happening too. There is so much going on in the world, but who cares? We have gone from having little information to being completely inundated with it. The brain has a hard time filtering what is important and what is not, so we end up having an apathetic attitude towards everything around us.

This letter is called CENSORSHIP. One of the goals of the elite is to eliminate freedom of expression. The clearest example of where this charter is: YouTube (there are more and more policies restricting some types of videos preventing content creators from monetizing them).

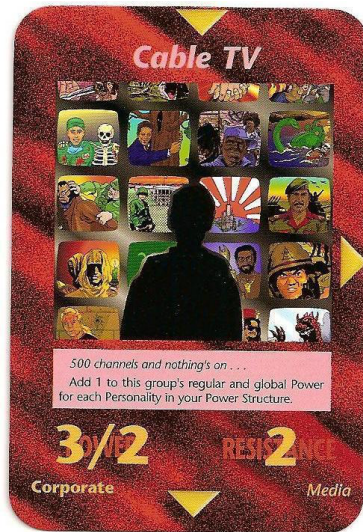

"Charismatic leader." What's so curious about that? Who do you think this person looks like? This card seems to be the one that predicted "charismatic" President Donald Trump. It is related to the following one:

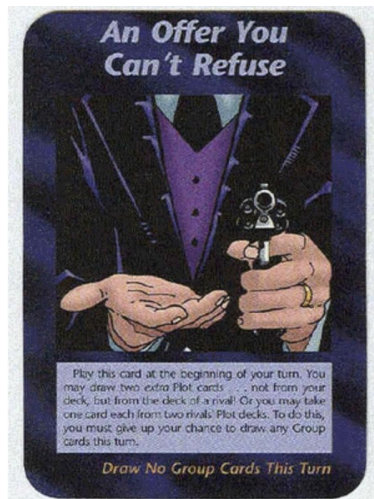

Letter description: "At any time, anywhere, our snipers could drop you, have a nice day".

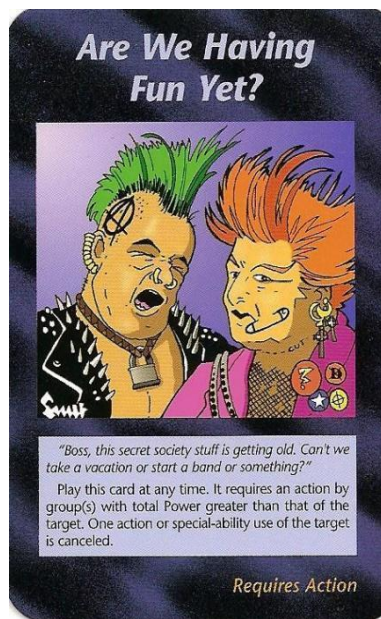

With the description of this letter we can understand that if Trump comes to disobey what the elite ask for the solution would be a sniper.

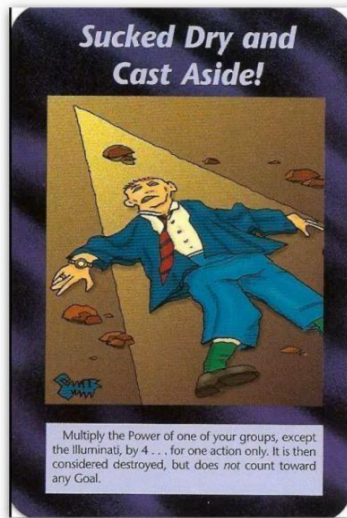

Name: Cable TV. Description: 500 channels and nothing happens. What he means by this is that TV channels only serve to keep people distracted and stupidized with programs that teach nothing. The elite manipulate all media to make you see what they want you to see.

A DEAL WHICH YOU CANNOT REFUSE. This card gives us to understand that if they propose something to you, be it money, fame or power in exchange for something, you know where you will end up.

Are we still having fun? Description: Boss, this secret society thing is getting old, can we take a vacation, form a band or something? This card would indicate how the Illuminati take control of the entertainment industry in order to control the masses. The clear example of this we have in trap and reggaeton where their singers are continually making references to the Illuminati.

"Dried out and cast aside." This card refers to the current system where we are made to study a large part of our lives and then have to work practically all the rest; this is what is meant by "dried up". When people are no longer useful to the system they are retired, that is, they are thrown aside.

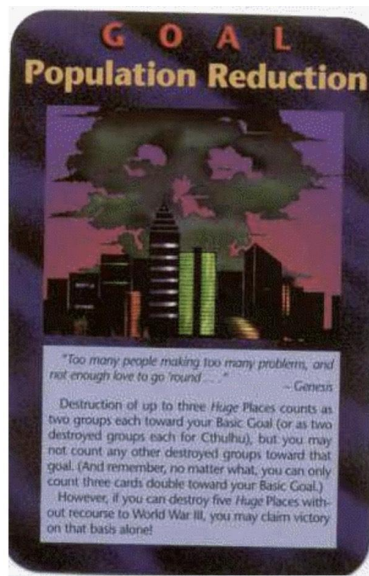

"Viejo libro horripilante. Pensaba que solo era un cuento, pero es real... ¡NO! ¡Me ha tocado!"

Vincula esta carta a un Grupo Violento o Mágico. La Fuerza de ese grupo se dobla, pero siempre que saque un 11 o 12 en cualquier acción, éste se destruye. El Necromomicón no se destruye, sólo se desvincula... ¡El grupo destruido cuenta para tus condiciones de victoria sólo si eres el Sirviente de Qthulhu!

Artefacto Mágico Único

Description: A scary old book... I thought it was just a story, but it's real!... NO! That touched me! The Necronomicon is a book that is cursed. It is said to contain the power to resurrect the dead. Loosely translated, its title means "a picture of the law of the dead". It is considered one of the most mysterious books in existence.

"Population reduction". Description: Too many people making too much trouble and not enough love to give them... This card indicates one of the main objectives of the elite: to reduce the world's population. They would do this through diseases they create themselves in laboratories, financing pro-abortion marches and introducing fluoride in the water that would affect us in the long run.

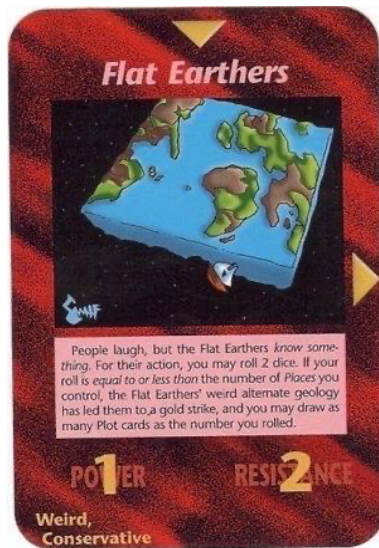

"TERRORIST NUCLEAR WEAPON". Prediction of the attack on the twin towers on September 11, 2001? Or was it all already planned? Let's remember that the cards were created in 1994. Note that the name says "nuke", i.e. nuclear bomb, giving wings to those who claim that the Twin Towers collapsed as a result of a controlled demolition and not because of the crash of a terrorist plane.

Attack on the Pentagon on September 11, 2001.
Predictor or coincidence?

TERRAPLANERS. Description: People laugh at them. But the terraplanists know something...

This letter does not confirm that the Earth is flat or that the terraplaners are right. What it may be saying is that some of their arguments such as NASA being a fraud may be true... "they know something".

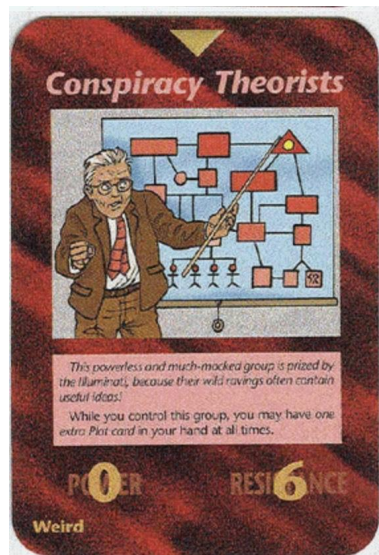

Let's look at the following letter.

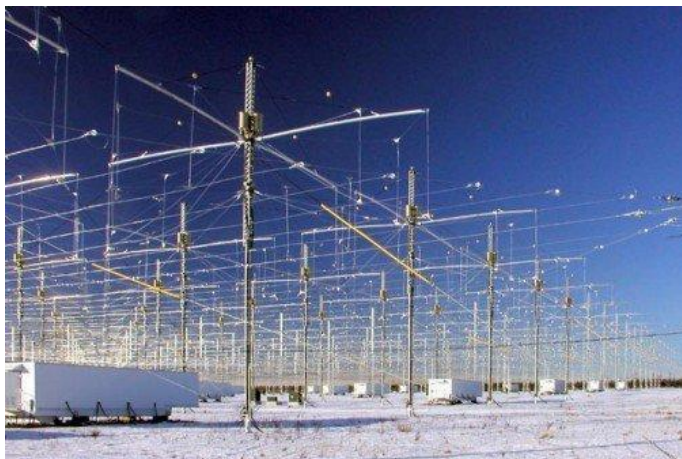

What conclusions would you draw from this letter and the previous one?

"REWRITING HISTORY". There is a theory that history as we have been told it is false. It is said that all the events that have occurred were invented or slightly distorted to cover up what really happened.

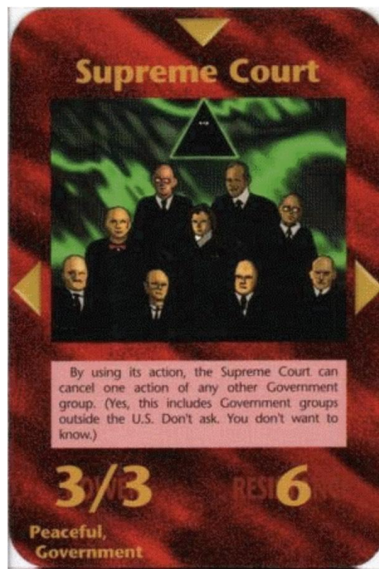

CONSPIRATORS. Description: This powerless and much derided group is appreciated by the Illuminati, because some of their crazy thoughts sometimes contain useful ideas. What we can deduce from this card are two things: first, the possibility that the elite use in their favor some ideas of false conspiracies, and secondly that it is the same elite that invents false conspiracies to cover up those that are true as well as inventing crazy conspiracies to make the conspirators look crazy.

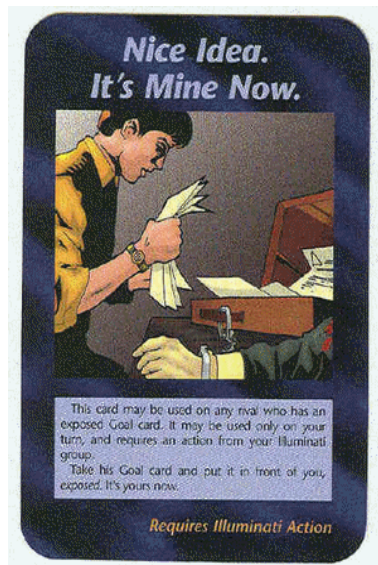

The letter EARTHQUAKE PROJECTOR refers to the HAARP project, which for many was the one that caused the earthquakes in Haiti, Chile, China, Japan and obviously the tsunamis referred to such movement. This project is maintained and managed directly by the Pentagon.

SUPREME COURT. Description: "By using its remedy, the Supreme Court can cancel an action by any other government group. (Yes, this includes government groups outside the US.... Don't ask. You don't want to know.)"

GOOD IDEA, NOW IT'S MINE. Facebook could be the perfect "idea" for storing personal information: phones, photos, maps, address, work, friends and even personal likes and dislikes. When Mark Zuckerberg was subpoenaed by the U.S. Congress (due to the Data Privacy scandal that arose when it became known that the company Cambridge Analytica (working for Donald Trump's campaign) improperly obtained the data of 87 million Facebook users, many theories were formulated due to the strange behaviors that Mark presented. Many said that he looked like a "robot" and if you watch the videos, you really notice a strange way of acting, as if he was being controlled or monitored.

BASE ON THE MOON. The reader already knows everything about this subject.

SUMMIT/CUPSIDE/CIMA: Is the elite playing these cards?

To conclude all this and as who says "add fuel to the fire" I leave you in textual words what a former Dutch banker and international broker who worked for 5 years in the highest world financial elite said:

"Everyone thinks there are good guys and bad guys in the world, but it's just a game, at the highest levels everyone works together."

"Most of them think they are there to serve and protect the people, but it turns out they are criminal organizations, in fact, the system is criminal. We talk about creating and financing wars, basically creating misery in this world and a lot of conflicts."

"Everything we think we know in the world, is just an illusion we believe in."

"When you get so deep into these circles you sign a lifetime contract to never reveal names of companies, organizations and people...I think that's why I'm still alive."

*"To put it carefully, most of these people followed a not very popular religion; you have Catholics, Protestants and all kinds of religions. Most of these people were Luciferian (...) they serve something immaterial called Lucifer.

FINAL REFLECTION

We could go on, it is true, there are still many unanswered enigmas. There are many questions that we do not cover here since they have been answered in some of our other books. In any case, it is important to keep the following in mind:

The truth is not out there, and neither is the answer to all our doubts. It is not necessary to know and know everything, but to know how to play and dance with the apparent uncertainty of being alive.

Ultimately, what we humans want is to feel loved, but to do that, we have to love.

CONSCIENCIA DISRUPTIVA

We are a company dedicated to the dissemination of disruptive material to achieve in this way continue to expand human consciousness while enjoying this journey through the material world.

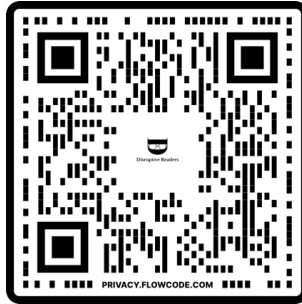

Life is a game, and we are here to play it. In the meantime, we continue to expand our minds to levels we could never have conceived of reaching before.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Many people made this book possible, but the greatest thanks go to my mother. She was the one who accompanied me and listened to me from the beginning, reading it as many times as necessary, correcting it and encouraging me. I don't want to lie and say that I wouldn't have written it without her, but the book wouldn't be what it is if it weren't for her.

To thank my father, even though he is totally oblivious to most of the questions and answers that are captured, he is always there to give me a hug when I need it the least, but love him the most and to support me in everything I undertake.

I also want to thank my brother, the person with whom I have the biggest fights, but also the biggest reconciliations. He is the one who has been able to keep quiet and listen when it is the only thing I need. He is the one who encouraged me from minute one when I told him about the idea of writing this book.

I only have words of gratitude and love, these three people have been the most influential in my life.

I am also grateful to my grandmother, with whom we talked for long hours about many of the questions that I address in the book and it was through her that I was inspired to put those long conversations on paper. Thank you.

To every person who crossed paths with me at some point in my life, I want to thank you, because whether in a good or bad way you have influenced who I am today. I am not the past because I do not live there, but I am a continuous succession of present events that were left behind, that today are no longer, but were and will be part of my consciousness. Teachers, professors, ex-friends, ex-girlfriends, and close friends that I keep today have made me who I am today.

To everything the universe has sent me, everything that has manifested in my life, in whatever way, thank you.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

It all started when I was about 4 or 5 years old. I don't have much awareness of what I did or the events that occurred during those age periods (as I'm sure many people do) but I have one fact that I have never forgotten. I don't remember the day, but I do know it was at night. I lived with my parents in a small house so it was all sort of joined together, that is: kitchen, bedrooms, living room, everything was very close and what connected everything was a hallway, which most of the time was dark. That night my mother was cooking, my father was lighting the stove and I was playing in the living room, where there was a large piece of furniture of those that are used to store glasses, objects to decorate, plants, etc. and this particular one had in the middle a large space to put a not very big television. The furniture had its back to the entrance of the house, let's say that the position was not the best in the world, but as I said, there was not too much space. If we were in the kitchen, we could see from the hole in the cabinet towards the entrance, and to the right we could see the dark hallway. I was facing the cabinet, playing in the part where the hole was. I don't know why, nor how, nor the reason, but at one point I turned my head to look at the hallway which was all dark, when suddenly I saw a "shadow" like a silhouette walking towards me. It was like an instant, I mean, the most logical thing to do would have been to run away, but I can't tell you the reason why I didn't do it. The shadow approached the hollow of the closet and put its hand on mine. He only held it for a second (that's what I remember). Moments later I calmly walk out to where my mother was (she was 2 meters close to me) as she was in the kitchen. According to her words and what she remembers, she says that when I told her what happened I wasn't scared or upset, I just didn't understand what had happened. My mother comments that I said something like, "ma, there's someone in the hallway". After the commotion my father also heard and they immediately went to see if there was anything there. There was nothing. They also checked the rooms as I stated in no uncertain terms what had happened to me. Nothing. Perhaps my innocence in this event and that I did not react with fear was for the simple reason that at that age we are totally pure and what we know is what we have been told, and no one had ever told me about paranormal type things.

After this event, a somewhat similar one happened to me, but in this case I didn't see anything. I went to my room (which I shared with my parents) to look for a toy. Checking under my bed I feel as if someone is grabbing my hand again. In this case I don't see anything, I just feel. Here I run out and go to my mother.

Similar things have never happened to me again. Nowadays I don't look for an explanation for them because I don't think I need them. Although I would like to have them, it is not something I cannot live with. I chose to accept and if it really happened, it's a good thing it did and I can tell about it.

Leaving aside the paranormal, I want to tell you about something that marked my belief towards beings from another planet, or at least, towards what would be the beginning of the fascination for life beyond our planet.

I live in a very small town where it is customary every weekend to walk around the city. I was about 9 or 10 years old when this happened. As was customary, my parents and I would go out for walks and stroll around the streets (in this case we were driving). One Sunday afternoon on one of these walks, my mother or I (I don't remember well) spotted something strange in the sky. The object was moving, and although it was not at great speed, it was moving fast. My father who was driving was immediately interested in the subject and although he could not see well since the object was seen from the right side, he decided to follow it. Fortunately for us, following in a straight line along the main street of the city was enough to not lose sight of it. From the moment we saw it, we must have followed it for 7 blocks or more (about 700 meters) until it reached a point where it stopped.

By now we were all more than sure that it was neither an airplane nor a satellite, it was simply a UFO as its acronym defines it.

We stopped as well. The object was stationary for a couple of minutes when it suddenly made a turn (I can't quite describe the movement it made) and disappeared completely. As if it had propelled itself to who knows where and who knows how.

It was a shocking event that got me interested as never before in the UFO phenomenon and I think that both events that happened to me as a child marked a lot the curiosity I have for any related subject.

Cases of UFOs that I have been able to witness have happened to me quite a few and then more as I grew up, one more surprising than the other.

I give more importance perhaps to the first two stories because as I told you, they marked a before and after in my thoughts regarding each phenomenon, since having witnessed that from a very young age I think it opened my mind completely.

WHY DID I WRITE THIS BOOK?

I have always been a person who asks questions about absolutely everything, it seems that it is a necessity, but it is only curiosity, a desire to know more, but not to know everything. Just to know.

As I know that the public interested in this book are also curious people, I wanted to write a book that I would have liked to read a long time ago. A book that is concrete, but at the same time leaves me room for doubt, that makes me think and that I can (with the information it gives me) come up with my own "answers".

There is no single reason that I could tell you why I wrote this book. Several events (mine and other people's), documentaries, videos, blogs, movies, people around me and outside of me, books and a couple of other etcetera were the ones that have influenced and formed part of my motivation when it came to writing it.
